Air Negotiators Agree to Terms

Walkouts Hit CBC Radio, TV

TORONTO (CP) — Technicians walked off the job at all but one of the CBC stations across Canada in a contract dispute today, but the public - owned corporation maintained daytime radio and television programming with use of management personnel.

While CBC officials were confident they could continue regular production of most radio and TV programs, the walkouts threatened cancellation of a telecast of tonight's National Hockey League game, a country-wide Saturday night feature for years.

Walkouts hit CBC radio and television stations from St. John's, Nfld., to Vancouver. The union, the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians, termed the walkouts study sessions and said they would last anywhere from five to 24 hours. They started in most areas about 9 a.m. local time.

If the walkouts continued tonight they would force the CBC to scrap teleasting of the NHL game in Montreal between the Canadiens and Boston Bruins. An alternative TV game—New York Rangers at Vancouver— also would be knocked out.

NHL TELECAST

Cec Smith, assistant director of public relations for the CBC in Toronto, said officials would not know until about 6 p.m. EST tonight whether it would have to cancel the NHL telecast.

"If we can't get either of the games, it could be the first time in history that Canadians will be unable to watch a television game on Saturday night," Mr. Smith said. "We'll have to show a movie."

Mr. Smith said the technicians were off the job in all CBC stations with the exception of Ottawa, where union members who walked out Friday night returned to work this morning.

Mr. Smith said he did not know how many of the 2,110 technicians in the union were involved in today's walkouts.

"But it would not be many because we have a reduced staff on weekends when many programs are films or are taped in advance."

Meanwhile, the technicians were voting today whether to go on strike officially. The vote is expected to be counted by noon Monday. A strike was legal at 12:01 a.m. Friday.

NEWFOUNDLAND GRIT RESIGNS SEAT

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. — The sudden resignation of a Liberal member of the Newfoundland legislature has given the newly-formed Conservative government a tiny, but perhaps vital, edge. A former magistrate, Augustus Oldford, announced Friday he was leaving politics "for personal reasons" and that he wished to return to the bench.

As a result of the new vacancy, standings in the 42-seat house are as follows: Conservatives, 21; Liberals, 19, and New Labrador Party, 1. See story on Page 31.

Planted 'Bugs' FLQ Downfall

MONTREAL (CP) — The Star says "electronic eavesdroppers" played a major role last October in smashing of a Front de Liberation du Quebec cell planning to mark the first anniversary of the Quebec kidnap crisis with a series of political assassinations.

Attributing its information to a reliable police source, the newspaper says integrated circuit wireless transmitters planted in homes, offices and cars belonging to suspected terrorists and sympathizers enabled police to learn of plans to assassinate an undetermined number of politicians.

"All the details will eventually come out," the unnamed source is quoted as saying. "For the time being, let it suffice to say that extremely well-known politicians had been marked for assassination while others were to be kidnapped and held for ransom — and perhaps killed later.

"Part of our operations were reported in the press last October — unfortunately, because it interfered with our work at the time."

The Star's informant referred to published reports that the number of guards had been increased for cabinet ministers, amid other security measures.

The newspaper said its informant agreed with a published report Friday quoting Solicitor-General Jean-Pierre Goyer as saying the anniversary plans might have had consequences more serious than the 1970 kidnappings of British diplomat James Cross and Labor Minister Pierre Laporte and Mr. Laporte's subsequent murder.

The Star's source said the FLQ cell broken up last October included about 10 men and two women, all in their late teens and early 20s.

"We never did get enough evidence to charge any of them with attempted murder or attempted kidnapping — because those are usually tough charges to make stick in front of a jury."

Members Vote Tuesday

OTTAWA (CP)—Government and union negotiators agreed early this morning on a proposed settlement of the air traffic controllers' strike, but government announcement of the settlement's terms produced angry criticism from the union.

Michael Bolger, chief negotiator for the government, said the two sides agreed on a 27-month contract providing a 17-per-cent pay raise and reduction of the controllers' work week to 34½ hours from 36.

The terms represent substantial concessions by the union.

But the strike is to continue at least until Tuesday, when the controllers will vote on whether to ratify the settlement.

Union spokesman Richard Campbell issued a statement criticizing Mr. Bolger for releasing the terms of the proposed settlement before controllers across the country had been informed of it.

Mr. Campbell said Mr. Bolger's announcement was "irresponsible" and could prolong the strike.

Mr. Campbell also said the controllers would co-operate in providing any necessary emergency service to British Columbia, where road and rail transport have been crippled by snowstorms.

The 1,600 members of the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association went on strike six days ago, causing shutdown of regular air service across the country.

Mr. Campbell, association president, said the proposed settlement is mainly the result of union concessions, but the union bargaining team

Wall of Snow and Ice Cuts B.C. From Canada

VANCOUVER (CP) — A wall of ice and snow separated British Columbia from the rest of Canada today as wide areas of the province battled the aftermath of winter storms which knocked out power, communications and transportation.

Motorists stranded by snowslides were rescued by snowmobilers in some areas and hundreds of rail and bus passengers were halted at small communities by blockage of their routes.

Stores and schools were closed in some communities where residents went without heat, light or telephone while embattled work crews struggled to restore telephone and power lines knocked down by accumulations of ice.

Rail and highway traffic through the Rocky Mountains was halted, effectively sealing off the province already cut off by air because of a nationwide strike by air traffic controllers.

Major road and rail routes blocked either by snowslides or massive traffic jams included the Rogers Pass and Crowsnest Pass highways through the Rockies, and the Fraser Canyon and Hope-Princeton highways linking Vancouver and the Lower Mainland with the interior.

Both Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways cancelled all eastbound departures from Vancouver and turned back westbound trains at Edmonton and Calgary.

Two westbound CNR passenger trains were stopped at Kamloops in the B.C. interior and their 700 passengers billeted in hotels and private homes in the area.

A westbound CPR passenger train was stranded for a time in the Fraser Canyon but, with a snowplow leading, had reached the tiny canyon community of Yale by Friday night.

All eastbound bus service from Vancouver was cancelled and four westbound Greyhound buses were forced to turn back to Princeton, 180 miles east of here, after being stranded on the route to Hope, 90 miles east of here.

A number of persons who had been stranded north of Hope were rescued Thursday by a snowmobile rescue crew preceded by a three-man party on snowshoes.

In the Fraser Canyon, 18 persons, including children, were rescued Friday from one of a series of tunnels on the mountainous stretch of road

SUN NOT STAYING

If anyone noticed that peculiar phenomenon shining on Victoria today, be assured it is a temporary condition.

The weatherman says the sun isn't going to shine any more, at least this weekend.

He's calling for mostly cloudy conditions with the occasional rain shower thrown in. Hopefully the showers won't be quite as intense as the long periods of rain which practically submerged Victoria the last few days.

Whatever the case, they'll be around tonight and Sunday.

Government Warns Insurance Firms

The provincial government will take a dim view of any attempts to get around its order for a $15 maximum premium for no-fault automobile insurance coverage effective March 1.

Dr. J. F. K. English, chairman of the B.C. Automobile Insurance Board, said Friday a letter to car insurance companies gives "some indication" that the board will consider "action" against such attempts.

The board issued the order Friday for a $15 maximum premium for the no-fault coverage nine days after a hearing at which insurance companies warned they would have to increase third-party liability premiums to offset

Oil Has Been Shipped for Years Down B.C. Coast From Alaska

VANCOUVER (CP) — Environmentalists concerned over the threat of pollution from a yet-to-be-decided American oil tanker route down the British Columbia coast have been given a new target.

It appears that an American marine towing company and at least one Vancouver firm have been moving oil in bulk by barge through coastal waters for years.

Mark Rose, New Democratic Party member of Parliament for Fraser Valley West, said Friday he had written to Environment Minister Jack Davis and Transport Minister Don Jamieson on the matter two months ago.

He said Mr. Jamieson had replied confirming the oil shipments by a Seattle firm, while Mr. Davis denied any such shipments.

Robert Roe, general manager of the Seattle-based United Transportation Co., confirmed in a telephone interview that his company had been moving barges between Alaska and Washington state "for years."

SHIPMENTS GO MONTHLY

He said there usually is about one shipment a month. The latest arrived in Seattle Friday night with a cargo of 70,000 barrels of oil.

He said the barges use the inside passage between Vancouver Island and the mainland and occasionally take the ocean route to the west of the Island.

Mr. Roe also said that Canadian companies make the same type of shipments on the B.C. coast.

A spokesman for Gulf of Georgia Towing Co. in Vancouver confirmed that the firm periodically ships oil in bulk in barges to coastal points. He said the largest shipments carried are about 30,000 barrels.

Mr. Roe charged in an interview that the information he had received from Mr. Davis was "ridiculous" and that "it seems one ministry doesn't know what the other one is doing."

"Here we have the self-styled pollution fighter (Davis) from the West Coast who, when asked something of his own area, takes two months to come up with the wrong answer," he said.

The NDP member also said that Mr. Jamieson "is misleading the country in claiming there is nothing the government can do to prevent or regulate the shipments, especially if Canadian vessels are also involved."

INKY HEATH doubles over following attack by woman on left as Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home calmly looks on.

HURLED INK SMEARS HEATH

BRUSSELS (UPI)—A woman hit British Prime Minister Edward Heath with a bottle of ink today as he arrived to sign the European Common Market membership treaty.

As Heath walked up the marble staircase of the Egmont Palace, the woman threw a bottle of ink which splashed over his clothes and over the stairs. The woman herself was splashed with ink.

Heath left the building immediately to change his clothes, delaying the formal signing.

The woman, who gave her name as Miss Karen Cooper, 31, a psychologist and teacher of German nationality, was led away by Belgian police.

Apparently, she had obtained accreditation as a news correspondent to cover the signing ceremony and used this to gain entrance into the heavily guarded palace.

Before she was led away she handed out copies of a mimeographed statement protesting plans by the British government and the Greater London Council, the British capital's local parliament, to redevelop the area of the Covent Garden vegetable market in London.

Miss Cooper did not appear to be connected with a small group of anti-market protesters who demonstrated outside the palace before the signing ceremony.

Later, Heath returned and signed the treaty.

Violence Spreads In Rhodesia

SALISBURY (Reuter) — Violence spread during the night to the Rhodesian midlands town of Que Que, seventh centre to be hit in a current wave of black African riots, and seven blacks were wounded by riot police gunfire, police reported today.

The Que Que disturbances brought the African casualties in riots throughout the country to 15 dead and 56 wounded. About a dozen Europeans also have been injured, mostly when their cars were stoned.

Police said the violence at Que Que — a town of about 38,000 inhabitants, 34,000 of them black — was concentrated in the African suburb of Amavenie on the main road to Salisbury.

A truck was stoned and later set on fire and a train also came under a barrage of stones.

Rhodesia now has had nine days of violence.

The violence came to a head as members of a British commission toured the country to test opinion on the terms of an independence settlement for Rhodesia, which broke away from Britain in 1965.

Pigeons Curbed, How About People?

Now that Victoria's horde of sex-happy pigeons are going to be sterilized, what's going to be done to cut down on proliferating Victorians?

That is the gut issue for ornithologist David Stirling in a comment today on a city parks committee decision to buy Ornitrol — a drug that will temporarily sterlize local pigeons in an effort to keep their growing numbers down.

"I agree that too many pigeons can be a nuisance," Stirling said. "But what about a study to determine the maximum population this area can stand without running into serious trouble?"

Stirling also fears the bird control feed may be eaten by innocent birds of other species.

But Rory Finegan, biologist with the B.C. Fish and Wildlife Branch, said that right after the unsuspecting pigeons have gobbled up the doctored feed, it will be swept up before other birds get their beaks into it.

"It is a humane way of reducing the population," Finegan added. "However, I think people would object if the parks committee tried to get rid of all the pigeons. People like to see them around. They bring some life to the city."

Cafe Robbery Nets $25

Thieves broke into a downtown restaurant overnight and stole about $25 from a cigarette machine.

City police said the rear door was forced at Betty's Cafe, 815 Government.

There were also four house break-ins overnight in the Oakland-Belmont area, an officer said, with small amounts taken from each home.

'SOMETHING TO BE THANKFUL FOR'

EDMONTON (CP) — "One thing we have in this country," Allan Smith of Red Deer said "is too much government."

"But I think we should be thankful that we are not getting as much as we are paying for," he told the Western Hog Growers Association annual meeting.

Smith is vice-president of United Grain Growers Ltd.

Look-Alike Hired For Hughes

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (UPI) — A former security chief for billionaire recluse Howard Hughes once employed a look-alike actor to impersonate Hughes in order to throw process servers and reporters off the track, the News Chronicle reported this week.

Gerald C. Chouinard, who said he worked for Hughes between 1950 and 1968 as chief of security, said actor Brooks Randall was hired to appear in public and to lead observers to believe he was Hughes.

Chouinard suggested that a similar imposter hired by enemies of Hughes may have perpetrated a hoax on Clifford Irving, the author who allegedly interviewed Hughes for a forthcoming autobiography.

"The book has to be a phony," Chouinard told the News Chronicle. "Even though I wasn't connected with Hughes the past few years, I was able to, without revealing how, keep track of him. I know just where he went, where he's been and how he's lived. It would be just impossible that Hughes has met anybody like this writer. It doesn't make sense that he'd do this."

London Bobby Patrols City Streets in May

A London Bobby in blue serge, helmet and chinstrap will patrol Victoria streets for a week in May as part of British Shopping Week.

The Bobby, helpful symbol of Britain to millions of tourists in the U.K., will remind oldtimers in Victoria of the helmet and uniform worn over 25 years ago by city policemen.

Local police are willing to act as hosts to their Metropolitan Police Department opposite, but they draw the line there. City police rejected a request that they wear their old uniforms during British Shopping Week.

The event is sponsored by Victoria Chamber of Commerce, Downtown Business Association and the U.K. department of trade and industry in connection with the second annual Victoria Days celebration, May 22-27.

One of the organizers asked police to restore their livery to lend atmosphere downtown. Instead, police offered to take the Bobby on point and beat duty, and be friendly toward natives and visitors.

Bobby — his name has not yet reached the British trade office in Vancouver — has had special training in public relations and will take the opportunity to explain how his department works and some of its problems.

Victoria police commission has agreed to underwrite $10 a day out-of-pocket expenses and the British Week committee will pay his board and fare.

Efforts failed to have a Royal Navy aircraft carrier or other warship visit the port at the same time.

But the trade office is sending one of its special promotion kits to help hallyhoo the week. It has among its items:

A six-foot model of Concorde supersonic airliner; bagpipes and Scottish regalia; 12 historical costumes; a large sculptured lion and unicorn; suits of armor; bales of bunting and Union Jacks; cardboard cutouts of Bobbies and Coldstream Guards; arrangements for artisans of many talents for demonstrations in Victoria shops.

The latter may include a leather craftsman, silversmith, glassblower, weaver, blacksmith, potter and stained glass glazier.

For its part, the Empress plans to engage for that week an English harmaid and a cook specializing in such wholesome delicacies as pork pie.

. . . SNOW AND ICE

after they were trapped by slides up to 50 feet deep.

Hardest hit by the storms was the southwestern part of the province consisting of the Lower Mainland and Fraser Valley.

Although many areas which had been without power since Thursday regained service Friday, the province still faced a critical power shortage due to breaks in major transmission lines.

Power supply to the lower mainland and Vancouver Island remains serious.

B.C. Hydro is serving southwestern B.C. largely with power borrowed from United States utilities.

Residential customers can help protect the power supply by turning off unnecessary lights and appliances and commerical customers also are asked to curtail unnecessary power use, particularly neon and other illuminated signs.

Hydro engineers believe they have established where breaks occurred on both of the 500,000-volt transmission lines which feed Peace River power to the lower mainland.

Extensive damage to the No. 1 Peace River line in the area east of Agassiz is expected to keep that line out of service for some time.

Location of damage to the No. 2 Peace River circuit has been narrowed down to a section in the Stawamus River Valley, eight to 10 miles southeast of Squamish.

A patrol is on its way in and engineers hope to fly over the area by copter later today.

Nearer to Vancouver, in the Lower Mainland, 150 linemen worked to repair four steel transmission towers collapsed under the weight of ice just east of Agassiz.

In Chilliwack, about 30 miles east of here, radio station CHWK returned to the air with reduced wattage after having suspended broadcasts to lend its emergency power generator to a senior citizens' home.

Many businesses in Chilliwack were closed while others were busy selling camp stoves, flashlights and candles.

Storm conditions appeared to be abating in the affected areas Friday night with rain forecast for coastal regions and snow flurries for the interior.

. . . AIR STRIKE

Bolger said the settlement supported Mr. Trudeau's contention that it would have been irresponsible to strip the controller's of the right to strike as soon as they tried to use it.

The key problem now, he said, is to "rebuild and reinforce the relations we had with the controllers before the strike."

LABOR TROUBLE STAYS

Whatever the results of the controllers' vote Tuesday, the nation's airports will still not be free of labor difficulties.

Remaining on the boil is a dispute involving more than 600 electronic technicians who service and monitor radar, navigational and communications equipment in the control towers.

Together with the rest of the 2,200-member local of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the technicians staged a 24-hour protest strike Tuesday. A full scale strike is scheduled for the first week of February.

The technicians, seeking to reduce the salary gap between themselves and the controllers, initially demanded a 50-per-cent wage increase in salaries to $15,000 a year.

Since then the group has rejected a conciliation report recommendation for a 15-per-cent raise to $11,500 in a 28-month contract.

The top-rated operating controllers now earn a maximum of $14,500 a year, with supervisors receiving up to $18,000. The average salary for all, including training controllers, is reckoned by the union to be $9,135.

AHEAD 60 PER CENT

The controllers had sought a 60-per-cent raise to draw them abreast of top-paid control tower workers in the United States. More moderate was the 22 per cent raise recommended by the union representative on the conciliation board.

. . . CAR INSURANCE

reductions in no-fault insurance. Current no-fault premiums are $20 to $22.

"We'll look after that," English said Friday adding that the board has suggested the insurers give "some study" to their positions on the matter.

Bill Hartley (NDP—Yale Lillooet) said the rate reduction was "far too little" and criticized the board's failure to order refunds on past overcharges.

He said the reduction to $15 still allows insurance companies to claim 40 per cent of the premium dollar for administration expenses. Yet one insurance company at the hearing said expenses of 18 per cent were adequate "so the premium should be rolled back to at least $12 a year."

Hartley, the NDP car insurance critic, said the reduction was also based on a year when premium revenue was smaller than normal because the motorists weren't charged for no-fault coverage until their policies came up for renewal. The coverage became compulsory Jan. 1, 1970.

Most insurance companies said at the hearing that the $20 to $22 rate currently being charged for no-fault insurance was justified despite the fact that claims under the coverage fell short of expectation.

Industry spokesmen said many persons were still collecting damages for death and injury under third-party liability insurance rather than under no-fault.

As a result, third party liability claims would have to rise to offset any reduction on no-fault, they said.

"We weren't convinced of that," English said Friday, confirming that the board has power to regulate all car insurance rates.

The hearing last week resulted from a board request in December for a maximum $14 no-fault premium.

The announcement Friday said the increase in the maximum rate of $15 takes account of the likelihood that additional claims will be made under the no-fault section in future.

The board took action after the Canadian Underwriters Association in early December announced average increases of 5.9 per cent in private passenger car insurance premiums but including no change in the $20 to $22 no-fault rates.

Cyclist's Inquest Monday

An inquest into the death of cyclist Michael Holland, 16, will open at 7:30 p.m. Monday at Chaplin's funeral chapel, 1155 Fort, deputy coroner Gerald Gerrie announced Friday.

The boy was killed Thursday evening when his bicycle was in collision with a car at Cook and Balmoral in Victoria.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Holland of 1250 Rudlin, Michael was well-known for his participation in minor hockey and other sports locally as well as activities with the Boy's Club.

He had played for the past nine years in the Victoria Monor Hockey Association, this year in the Midget House League. He had also played baseball in the Carnarvon House League and was a soccer and basketball player for the Boys' Club as well.

He had served as counsellor for the Boys' Club at their Camp Kalitan.

His funeral will be at Chaplin's Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.

the weather

Southwestern British Columbia and the extreme southern section of the province remained mild overnight but Arctic air maintained its grip on all other areas. Snow was fairly general in the cold air but ended in the Revelstoke and Blue River districts around midnight. The latter station recorded 11 inches of snow during the six-hour period ending at 10 p.m. The south coast was cloudy and mild with rainshowers.

Little change is forecast in the position of the Arctic front during the next 48 hours. Early this morning the system extended from north of Cranbrook, Castlegar and Kelowna to just south of Lytton to Alta Lake thence west northwestward. There will be periods of snow north of this line but accumulations will be fairly light. There is still a slight chance of freezing rain just north of the Arctic front. Rainshowers will continue over the south coast.

Socred Asks Quilt Probe

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson was urged in the legislature Friday by Ernest LeCours (SC—Richmond), to conduct an investigation into the controversial death of Fred Quilt in Williams Lake late last month.

Quilt was a 55-year-old Chilcotin Indian who died Dec. 30 two days after being arrested by RCMP. Police brutality was alleged, but an inquest later attached no blame to the police.

Ernie LeCours (SC—Richmond) said in the throne speech debate he has "very strong misgivings about what happened in this case."

His misgivings, he said, are based on his past experiences with "some members of police forces."

"I'm very suspicious of what takes place at night time sometimes and especially in what happens on dark roads at night."

Peterson said later he has tried twice to get a copy of the inquest without success. He did not indicate whether he would re-open the case.

Peterson also has been officially asked several questions about the inquest by Bill Hartley (NDP-Yale-Lillooet). Questions were placed on the legislative order paper Friday.

Scrolls Presented

Twenty-one defence department firefighters here were presented with scrolls Friday by Canadian Forces Base Commander Commodore R. V Henning for accumulating at least 25 years se rvice.

The firefighters, who together have 534 years of experience, belong to a 139-man department commanded by base fire chief G. M. Morrison which has won many trophies over the years from the National Fire Protection Association.

The service scrolls were signed by Prime Minister Trudeau and defence department officials.

U.S. Northwest Hit By Severe Flooding

Associated Press

Flood waters have chased hundreds of families from their homes in Washington, Oregon and northern Idaho in an assault of winter weather.

President Nixon declared Oregon a major disaster area Friday after Gov. Tom McCall told him damage estimates exceeded $6.1 million.

Asotin county commissioners declared that eastern Washington locale a disaster area with an estimated $100,000 damage.

Waters from rivers gorged by rains and snows melted unusually early rose to record flood levels in the western reaches of Washington, while inland portions of the state experienced the worst flooding since 1949.

Grays Harbor appeared to be the hardest-hit area, with boats used to evacuate families in some areas.

Extensive and expensive cleanups faced most other parts of the state, some the worst flooding in several decades.

Pullman experienced the worst flooding since 1948 as water filled the streets, damaging a dozen businesses and forcing the evacuation of about 300 persons from a student housing facility on the Washington State University campus.

Several communities were mere clapboard islands surrounded by newly-formed lakes.

Oregon Sen. Mark Hatfield said the U.S. Army corps of engineers had allocated $200,000 for flood fighting and rescue operations in Tillamook County, with more available if flooding continues.

Willamette River locations around Salem, Albany and Corvallis were braced for peak flood stage today.

The Chehalis River on Washington's Olympic peninsula crested nine feet about flood stage Friday, the highest the river has risen. The Chehalis Indian reservation was evacuated, along with some low-lying areas in communities near the river.

B.C. LOTTERY URGED TO GIVE PEOPLE HOPE

British Columbia needs a provincial lottery to give the average citizen reason to hope, Ernie LeCours (SC-Richmond) told the legislature Friday.

The Socred backbencher said $2 lottery tickets should go on sale at "liquor stores and other government buildings" throughout B.C.

People gamble, he said, and there is no reason to expect they will stop. Average citizens, particularly low-income wage earners, aren't going to get far in life and need something to hope for.

He indicated tourists also would like the idea.

"Let's give him a bit of hope at least half a dozen times a year. Let's give him something to look forward to because that's all he'll ever have. If it weren't for hope, we'd all be in despair."

LeCours' comments were not greeted with desk-thumping approval from the government benches.

Weather Hitting Grain Exports

VANCOUVER (CP) Winter weather in the British Columbia interior has supplanted the dock strike on the United States West Coast as the critical factor in clearing ships from Vancouver harbor and meeting Canada's grain export commitments.

William Duncan, acting port manager, said Friday the winter storms which have blocked rail lines and highways are causing serious delays in the movement of prairie grain, and some terminals are starting to run short of bulk exports.

The weather factor takes effect at a time when the harbor already is jammed with shipping, partly because of the rerouting of ships from strikebound U.S. ports.

There were 66 ships either at berth or anchored in English Bay today; 14 of them scheduled to pick up grain.

POSITION UNCERTAIN

There was some uncertainty concerning the position of B.C. dockworkers in relation to the strike at U.S. ports by the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

ILWU President Harry Bridges said prior to a meeting in Seattle Thursday with executive members of the Canadian branch of the ILWU that he would ask them to pull B.C.'s 3,500 dockworkers off the job in support of their American colleagues.

But Don Garcia, president of the union's Canadian branch, said later that Mr Bridges had made no formal request for such action.

The Canadian executive met here behind closed doors Friday night but Frank Kennedy, president of Vancouver Local 985 of the ILWU, would say only that discussion centered on "the ramifications of the U.S. strike on the Canadian union."

Prior to the Seattle meeting, Mr. Garcia had said B.C. dockers would adopt the same tactics they did during the 100-day walkout on the American West Coast that ended with a federal injunction last Oct. 6.

WILL HANDLE SHIPS

"We'll handle all ships that come in for the moment," he said. "If the situation changes, we'll consider what action to take."

Mr. Duncan said earlier this week that any strike action here would be illegal because "there is a contract in existence now, and it doesn't expire until July."

The slow-up in the movement of grain exports, if continued, would raise the threat of damage to the economy of Western Canada.

Canada is some 12 million bushels behind schedule in meeting her grain export commitments from West Coast ports, partly because of earlier delays in arrival of ships due to operating conditions in U.S. ports affected by the strike last year.

Peterson Deflects Plea On Sniffing to Ottawa

The government was asked Friday to ban the sale of nail polish, glue and other sniff items to people under 18 years old; but Attorney-General Leslie Peterson said the problem rests with Ottawa.

Peterson's comments came outside the legislature after Ernie LeCours (SC—Richmond) had called during the throne speech debate for an immediate ban on sale of these substances to juveniles.

LeCours spoke first for the government and moved adoption of the speech. He called for an order-in-council by Monday at the latest invoking the ban.

The Socred backbencher said glue and nail polish sniffing is "just as injurious" as the use of marijuana and other illegal drugs.

TRIED ONCE

Peterson said later the province once had tried to declare glue a prohibited substance but found out it lacked authority to do so. He added he will say more about the problem next week in the House.

He suggested people tell their federal representatives to ban these things, but admitted he was looking into the possibility of charging retailers selling glue or polish with plastic bags with contributing to juvenile delinquency.

Peterson said he hadn't been told whether this could be done, but if it could he wasn't going to tell the public about it.

ENDS INTERVIEW

Under further questioning, Peterson broke off the interview and went into his office.

On other subjects, LeCours called for a redistribution of wealth through wage, price, profits and interest rate controls.

He said no one should be making more than 40 per cent less than anyone else. Redistributing wealth, he said, would eliminate poverty in Canada.

"Governments are afraid of redistributing wealth because they're afraid of being voted out of office," he said.

He also accused big unions, such as the International Woodworkers of America, of demanding wage increases out of proportion in relation to wages in other industries.

LeCours said federal Social Credit leader Real Caouette is the only hope for Canada's future and regretted Scott Wallace (PC—Oak Bay) having quit the Socreds last year.

He noted the Conservatives had not been able to elect a member to the house since the early 1950s, so the Tory Wallace was nothing more than a "test tube baby."

"The good member from Oak Bay has cast his seed upon rather rocky ground," said Le Cours.

Willis Jefcoat (SC—Shuswap) seconded the throne speech, speaking briefly from a prepared text recounting the past achievements of Social Credit in B.C.

Afraid to Open Your Mouth?

Bad breath often becomes a real problem for many people with deteriorating dentition . . . gum trouble, caps, bridgework and especially dentures. Only your dentist can rectify these conditions. But Steri/sol Oral Antiseptic does much to control accompanying bad breath. Steri/sol is specially designed for this purpose. Steri/sol's formulation contains an exclusive, active ingredient called Hexetidine that deprives bacteria of thiamine. Without thiamine, the mouth-germs that cause bad breath cannot live. In fact, Steri/sol with Hexetidine is so effective, it kills 95% of these mouth-germs within 15 minutes. Then it clings to the mouth and gum tissue to control bad breath for up to 10 hours. No wonder many dentists use Steri/sol.

Try Steri/sol with Hexetidine. It costs more than you usually pay for a mouthwash, but then Steri/sol is not your usual mouthwash. Sold only at pharmacies.

Lewis Not Resigning

Cape Mudge Indian Band Chief Lawrence Lewis has decided not to resign after all following the narrow defeat of a municipal incorporation referendum last Monday.

Lewis said earlier he took the defeat to be a personal criticism of his promotion of the referendum, but band members circulated a petition asking him to stay on as chief.

Thursday night the band council passed a resolution saying the defeat was not a non-confidence motion in Lewis' leadership. Council also voted to try the referendum again as soon as changes can be made to reduce the percentage of yes votes needed for passage of the vote.

Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell said Friday he was pleased to see Lewis had decided to stay and reiterated his promise to amend the Municipal Act to allow referendums like the one at Cape Mudge to pass by 60 per cent majorities. (See also Page 5.)

Monday's vote needed a 75 per cent majority and fell short by only four votes. Campbell said he sent a telegram to Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien in Ottawa seeking federal approval for reduction of the percentage.

Campbell said he expects Chretien will approve the move. This means Cape Mudge could take another vote later this year. Passage of the referendum would make the community on Quadra Island near Campbell River, Canada's first Indian municipality.

A unique feature of the plan is that the Indians can revert to existing status if they decide they do not like municipal government.

SCHOOL WINS APPEAL RIGHT

An attempt by the Greatef Victoria Metropolitan Board of Health to stop an appeal by Saturna Free School from being heard in county court was dismissed Friday by Judge M. L. Tyrwhitt-Drake.

The school is appealing a health board eviction notice which forced it to close last summer after three controversial years of operation.

Tyrwhitt-Drake turned aside an involved technical objection by board lawyer Cecil Branson and ruled that the merits of the case must be heard by the court.

The appeal was adjourned to April 4 and 5 before any evidence was presented because the two lawyers said they would bring forth at least nine witnesses.

In rejecting Branson's objection that the county court had no jurisdiction for this case, the judge said that "too much attention to the niceties of technical objections" can obscure the ends of justice.

Branson had questioned the court's jurisdiction because the school had failed to put on the record two prerequisites: that it had spent at least $100 in complying with the eviction order, and that Saturna Island Free School Community Projects Ltd., which made the appeal, and William Sheffield, who signed it, were the occupants of the property who had to spend the money.

Tyrwhitt-Drake said common sense and common knowledge showed that these conditions were implicitly apparent in the notice of appeal and ruled for the case being heard.

The school closed following the eviction order which was issued Aug. 16. Unsanitary conditions were cited as the reasons, but the board refused to spell them out to Sheffield, the school's director.

The year before, after the school had survived an earlier closure order, Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread, the board's senior health officer, had given it a clean bill of health.

Vancouver lawyer William Sigurgeirson is conducting the case for the school.

The Battle of Oak Bay

The next provincial election campaign in Oak Bay — and perhaps it has already started — should be one of high interest, high tempers and high finance. The presence of Dr. Scott Wallace as a Conservative member of the Legislature even though he was elected as a Social Credit candidate, and now the candidature of Mr. Melville Couvelier for the Liberal Party, promise a brisk contest. But it goes without saying that the Social Credit organization, which long smarted under Oak Bay's Liberal representation in the House, and has now lost through defection the member it had at long last succeeded in electing, will throw every resource into the battle.

The Oak Bay constituency has achieved somewhat the status of a key seat in provincial politics. After so many years as an inherently Conservative area, both large and small "c", its capture by Liberal Archie Gibbs in 1952 became a milestone in that party's history. A succession of Liberal members from the constituency bolstered the corporal's guard which the party retained in the House, and sharpened the thorn-in-the-side which Premier Bennett suffered during each legislative session.

Dr. Wallace's victory in the 1969 election therefore became a first for the Social Credit machine and a jewel which Mr. Bennett — to quote him on a different occasion — could nail to the masthead. But the peppery physician, finding that he could not heal the party, decided that he could at least heal himself, and eventually announced his amputation from the government. More recently he emerged as a Conservative party supporter, and now is Tory House Leader and follower in a one-man opposition group.

How much of Dr. Wallace's win was due to his personal popularity as a critical maverick and energetic dissenter in many public issues, particularly medical, and how much was the result of the Social Credit party's massive campaign on his behalf, will be seen only in the next election race. He may be expected to carry a considerable personal appeal plus the latent conservative strength of Oak Bay. The Social Credit candidate is still unknown, but it may be assumed that the party will not gamble on anyone holding less than top appeal.

In this situation — with the governing party needing victory merely for prestige and to teach a defector a lesson, and a lone candidate who apparently fell into the Conservative slot merely because it was convenient — Mr. Couvelier emerges as a preferable choice to represent the constituency for its own sake. In any case, his statements and policies between now and the next election should receive close attention. He could end the present position of Oak Bay as a political pawn, and restore it to full stature as a constituency.

A Victory for the Parklands

It is good news that the city has been able to obtain the three-acre waterfront property in Victoria West known as the Barnard estate for a park in an area that sorely needs one. The long controversy over disposition of the land, which has been held by the federal government for the past twelve years, carries several lessons.

One is that city council should not hang fire on such projects for too long, for in this case the property was very nearly sold for a private building project after the city failed to come to an agreement. The threat to rezone to save it had a touch of dirty pool.

Another lesson is that the federal government should not be dealing in real estate on the basis that local governments have to compete with private interests in order to save the land for public use. Where a local government intends a commercial use for the land, that becomes a different matter. But parkland should take precedence when one agency of the people is dealing with another elected body.

And the federal government should not be haggling over a few dollars of profit from such exchanges. Ten or twenty thousand dollars is a much bigger item in a city's budget than it is in the multi-billion-dollar budget of the federal government. That is not to argue that federal property should be given away. The present settlement of cost plus reasonable interest seems to be a fair arrangement.

Victoria's Member of Parliament, Mr. David Groos, served the city well in helping to bring the impasse to a satisfactory end. We now have a seafront area — comparatively rare in this community — where the public can enjoy the view by right, rather than by trespass.

Deeper Into the Stars

Gigantic questions which have baffled man for centuries and more may be answered within the next ten years. That is the time it could take to build a projected 22-mile deep array of radio telescopes, possibly in New Mexico. Comprising the largest, most sensitive series of such instruments on earth, there would be nine, 82-foot, 200-ton antennae. The first instalment of the funds to the U.S. National Science Foundation will be made available in the next fiscal year. All told, the complex will cost $62.5 millions.

Probes into deep space could find solution to the mysteries of quasars — sources of vast energy radiation in the cosmos — and "black holes" — the blank areas in space which seem to annihilate energy. By no means the least result, we might intercept messages from other planets and learn if we really are as remote and primitive as a New Guinea valley used to be. The radio techniques would enable astronomers to make as detailed a map of the universe as optical astronomers can do at present for lesser distances.

As science becomes more and more our philosophical guide, the reason for making that guide more comprehensive and accurate assumes a practical as well as imaginative importance.

Politics and Strategy

WASHINGTON — Ever since the Indian-Pakistani war, there has been considerable doubt here about the wisdom of President Nixon's military strategy in backing Pakistan, but there should be little doubt about the domestic political strategy he had in mind when he sided with Pakistan and China against India and the Soviet Union.

He wants to be in the position to campaign for re-election on the proposition that he is the man who reduced the American Expeditionary Force in Vietnam from 550,000 to 40,000, who brought China out of isolation and established a line of communication to a quarter of the human race, who defused the Berlin problem, and began the process of negotiating the control of strategic nuclear weapons. Nobody understands the potential power of this argument as well as his Democratic opponents.

The Nixon "tilt" — to use the latest White House jargon — is not toward Pakistan but toward Peking. The "China Opening" is the key to his bid for re-election as "a man of peace," and according to those who think they understand his diplomacy in the Indian-Pakistani crisis, he was determined not to oppose Pakistan and risk the possibility that China would call off his Feb. 21 trip to Peking.

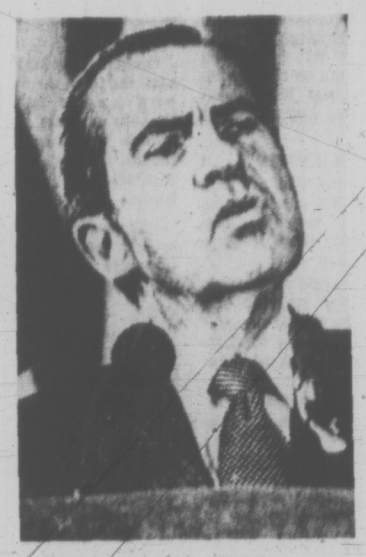
Nobody in authority here will admit it publicly, but privately officials concede that there was a conflict between Nixon's world military strategy and his domestic campaign strategy, and the considerations of Presidential politics prevailed.

Value of India

In terms of the world strategic struggle for bases, allies, and control of the seas, there was a powerful case to be made for Washington backing India. Aside from the obvious point that India is the most populous democracy in the world, and Pakistan a weak dictatorship, India dominates the sea routes between Japan and the oil fields of the Middle East, which are vital to Japan's spectacular economy and which, on present official calculations here, will be supplying between 30 and 35 per cent of U.S. petroleum products by 1980.

Nobody knows this better than the Soviet Union. Moscow learned in the Cuban missile crisis that it could not bring its influence to bear all over the world without a vastly expanded Navy, and has been building its naval power ever since. For example, Moscow now has over 300 attack submarines to 94 for the United States, and while we still have more nuclear subs than the Soviet Union, the official estimate in Washington is that by 1973, the U.S.S.R. will have more nuclear submarines than the total number of nuclear and diesel-power subs in the U.S. Navy.

Long before the Indian-Pakistani war, the Soviet Union had built a naval base for India at Visakhapatnam on the Bay of Bengal, and one of the military arguments in Washington for avoiding an open break with India was that India was obviously going to win with the military and diplomatic aid of the U.S.S.R., which would then be seeking access to the naval base at Visakhapatnam, or failing that, offering much needed aid to



RICHARD NIXON
. . . conflict of strategies

Bangladesh in return for military facilities at Chittagong; the new nation's port also on the Bay of Bengal.

No doubt there were many other considerations in the President's decision to back Pakistan. Nothing is ever quite so simple as a choice between a good military strategy and a good presidential campaign strategy. The president had personal ties to the Pakistani leaders and to the leaders of the other Muslim countries, which happen to control much of the oil of the Middle East, and while he understood the pressure of the Bangladesh refugees on India, he did not think this justified India's open aggression across the Pakistani borders.

Nevertheless, with all the different pressures of military strategy and political campaign strategy tugging him in opposite directions, the belief of well-informed men here is that the short-range political advantages of protecting the China trip and the possibility of reaching at least a limited accommodation with China, were decisive with Nixon.

Aside from politics, his argument is that reaching even the beginnings of an understanding with China may do more to avoid conflict in the Pacific than anything else, and if the cost of this is a temporary squabble with India and the establishment of Soviet naval and air power in the Bay of Bengal, a U.S.-China accommodation may be worth it.

This, of course, is one of the weaknesses of dramatic diplomacy and spectacular summit meetings set long in advance. The president had bet so much on the Peking trip that he could not easily risk losing it. And once he protected it by opposing India and siding with Peking, he created new problems with his allies in Japan and Korea.

Asians Nervous

Here, for example, despite Nixon's personal assurances, are President Chung Hee Park of Korea saying that he will watch the Nixon Peking visit "with deep concern," and the Japanese ambassador to the United States, Nobuhiko Ushiba, warning that Nixon's trip might be "the beginning of a process of unraveling our (U.S.-Japanese) mutual security in the Far East."

These fears, however, though natural, are probably groundless. Nixon is not going to Peking to sell out the Japanese or the Koreans or the Chinese Nationalists, but to create an atmosphere of conciliation, and through it, the basis for his own re-election.

It is silly to accuse him of acting against India because he was irritated by Prime Minister Gandhi or grateful to the Pakistani Government for slipping Henry Kissinger into China. He has much larger objectives in view. He doesn't want to enhance Soviet naval and air power across the oil routes to Japan, or increase Moscow's ability to blockade U.S. energy supplies at the other end of the world, but these are long range considerations. Re-election is much closer at hand and the China trip will look good on satellite television from the Forbidden City even if it solves nothing at all.

Speaking From the Heart

"It was Grey Cup Day and my day off," explains Ted McLoud. "I'd set my heart on watching the game. My heart changed my plans.

"I'd risen early. I usually do on my day off. And I'd just finished washing in the bathroom. As I reached the door, I didn't feel too well, so I moved into the living room through the hallway arch to sit on the chesterfield. For a minute or two I thought I was going to be sick — and then the pains started.

"You begin to wonder how much you can stand. It's like a vise tightening up. So I struggled back to bed and tried to tell my wife Claire I was in trouble, and I couldn't.

"She saw me in pain, guessed what was happening and phoned the doctor, telling him she thought I was having a heart attack. He told her to call an ambulance right away and she dialed 0, explained the situation to the operator and the operator asked if we lived in Saanich. Claire said yes and the operator plugged us right through to the Saanich emergency centre. In about five minutes or less a police officer and two firemen walked in and had an oscillator on me, operating. They fixed on an oxygen mask and the pains began to subside.

To Hospital

"They picked me up, gently as a baby, and put me on a stretcher in the living room and we were away to the hospital, with the equipment attached to me registering my condition in the heart centre and the nurses there giving the firemen instructions as we went.

"Funny, the thoughts that go through your head. I got the idea I was driving my regular bus route, recognized all the intersections and started worrying whether or not my tranfers were going to be all right.

"Almost before I realized it, I was in a little cubicle in the cardiac care section of the hospital, with a specially trained nurse watching the recording of my heart action.

"I'm here telling you about it now because of those firemen, the special training they had, the equipment they brought into play and the treatment they give you at the heart centre. But for all of them I'd have been tagged DOA.

. . . a fighting symbol

"I was six days in that little cubicle, able to see the nurse and watch the recording of heart actions, mine and those of others. That's where they baby you. They wouldn't even let me lift my hands above my head. Then I went into a ward with other heart cases and after a while they let me up, like the others, for short periods, but we had to keep our equipment on us so the readings of heart action could continue.

"Now I'm home and taking the exercises my doctor has prescribed. He's told me pretty emphatically what I can do and what I can't — and he's the doctor. I'm walking a mile and a half now, having worked it up from a saunter to the end of our sidewalk, but I take it slowly.

"From here on in, I won't be driving a bus. What I'll be doing I don't know, but that comes later.

"I've tried to let those firemen and the heart people know how much I appreciate what they did for me. If anything you write about it helps them to keep up the good work, encourages people to contribute to the funds they need, you write it with my blessings."

Vital Chapter

That's a brief but vital chapter in the life of Ted McLoud, who played soccer as a boy and put in his years at the Y. He had no warning of the attack he suffered, and he is convinced that it would have been fatal without the speedy attention, skill of trained personnel and use of sophisticated equipment which helped him over the hump.

His is a familiar story today, many with tragic endings. It is a story the B.C. Heart Foundation knows and thoroughly understands. When the ending is comparable to Ted's, the foundation workers are encouraged not only to do what they are doing now, but to reach out to do more, to acquire more life-saving equipment, to build rescue squads like the Saanich firemen, and to probe deeper into the problems of handling heart cases.

There's no lack of dedication in their work. There is, and probably always will be, a need for funds to support that dedication, to carry on the crusade against the most lethal affliction in the country.

The annual appeal is being launched next week — an appeal to the heart for the hearts that are beating in human bodies now, perhaps in your own.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

FREEMAN KING

During the recent snowfall the Island Highway as far as Goldstream Picnic Site presented intriguing sights. Every rock-cut and bank had a different pattern of snow formation. In some places it was banked high. In others the sharp face of the rock cuts stood out and, with the snow, seemed to form faces, the shapes of animals and the map outlines of different countries.

Along by Skirt Mountain the old snags against the white snow and the hazy skyline took on ghostly outlines.

Beside the road several large clumps of red alder, each twig with its snow-covered branches, looked like a beautiful tapestry curtain. As the clouds overhead moved, different patterns came into focus until it seemed alive. The background of the conifers, too, had their own particular outline, each species showing a different formation because each held the snow in a different way.

On the flat ground by the picnic site there was a complete change. The old mossed maples were covered with tiny icicles hanging like a necklace. Each tree had a slightly different pattern in this winter fairyland.

In many places some of the hazel shrubs had drops of frozen water on the end of twigs. They glistened like diamonds.

The stream ran crystal clear and, swirling around a stone, it made that music that can only be made by a living stream.

Looking up to the summit of Mt. Finlayson, which at times was hidden by the swirling clouds, one could see castles and battlements with the stark rock faces free of snow. Here one seemed to be in a world apart, quiet and beautiful.

The little waterfall that tumbles down from the high rock, runs between bright green clumps of moss and poly-pody ferns. The spray, freezing, makes little icicles into even more wonderful jewels than ever could be bought, and the little falls also have their own particular music.

'They are wholesalers of propaganda, vendors of whatever nonsense rings from the mouths of cabinet ministers on the way to the john...'

B.C. Radio News — Slightly less elaborate than Houston

By ALAN FOTHERINGHAM
The Sun

(From Victoria) — There is a definite, discernible point when an event degenerates into a non-event. Such a point came to the ship-in-a-bottle atmosphere of Victoria-by-the ennui Wednesday when a regiment or two of CBC technicians began erecting a Meccano-set tower on the lawn of the legislative building. (We shall leave aside for the moment the academic point that whenever CBC technicians exceed a maximum number of 57, any event — including the sinking of the Bismarck — automatically becomes a non-event.)

The erecting of the tower officially put Thursday's legislative opening into the category of the Bing Crosby Open. It has been lurching that way for the past several years, the symbolism of a parliament reconvening being subordinated to the mobile shot from the technicolor butterfly at stage left.

The "speech from the throne," a speech which is not his own, read by a stand-in for a Queen who is not here and never will be, is evidence enough in itself. If me or thee tried the same gimmick on a doorstep before a housewife in Burnaby we'd be arrested on charges of false pretences. Politics however, has convenient hypocritical ways around the truth.

The socially-favored few who crowded their bottoms into hard chairs on the legislative floor have been conned into walk-on roles, minus the ACTRA minimum rate. Just as golf spectators have become not individuals or groups — but manipulated audiences, permitted to walk here and not there, for the millions of television voyeurs at home, so, unwittingly, have all these socialite dollies, done up in the latest midi-length fashion handed down from Women's Wear Daily. They are the captive spear carriers, as surely as the mob recruited from the sidewalks as the backdrop for Queen For A Day.

The lieutenant-governor and the premier, much as they may kid themselves, are as much camera-fodder as the beer-bellied patrons who stand at the 17th green in the Sunday afternoon golf bores on the telly. You saw them, standing there on the legislative steps, pretending to gaze majestically off into the distance but in fact staring straight ahead at the sterile steel skeleton of the TV pedestal, mucking up the legislative lawn, blocking the view of poor old outraged Queen Victoria in statue and turning what was once a stately ritual into a mock up, starring mannequins, for the boob tube.

The media is not only the message. It is the master — as long as politicians go for the phoney stage dressing.

If we might be so ghastly as to go into this introverted matter further, there are intriguing entrails to be uncovered. The off-season, in racetrack parlance, is when the touts take a breather. In Social Credit patois, it is when the touts blossom as the dawn.

There has sprung, full-blown from the brow of radio operator Clare Copeland, something known as B.C. Radio News. Copeland is to Victoria radio what Muzak is, to elevators. His CFAX station dispenses what is known in the trade as candlelight and whine.

Mr. Copeland has devised B.C. Radio News as a quick, efficient method of transferring to the boondocks the words of Olympian wisdom that spill from the lips of retired piano-movers who populate the Social Credit backbenches.

CFAX, to show how independent it is, recently hosted a press party where the star turn was done by that well-known rent-a-Boswell, Ronald B. Worley, working his nubby little fingers to the bone autographing copies of his recent immortal work, convenient carloads of which had been purchased by CFAX.

B.C. Radio News, to show how independent it is, has as its foreman one Tony Cox, a former Social Credit executive assistant in Alberta thrown into unemployment by the whim of fickle voters.

Now it is a well-known fact, sung in folklore, that those destined to enshrine the platitudes of politicians work best in slum conditions. The equipment that festoons the creaking antique known here as the press gallery was gathered at a $1.49-day sale on the Ark.

The Industrial Revolution reforms governing the working conditions of children in the mines are violated hourly as the ink-stained wretches attempt to hurl into round filing cabinets the helpful press releases pressed upon them by government flacks.

It is interesting, therefore, to discover that coincidentally with the founding of B.C. Radio News, the electronic journalists assigned to assess Social Credit's place in history find themselves in spanking new quarters.

There has been a cosmetic rearrangement of M.L.A offices. The area last occupied by Liberal members has been turned into plush, plastic studios. There is a TV interview room, looking as if Richard Nixon is about to drop in at any moment. CFAX, overseer of B.C. Radio News, has a switchboard slightly less elaborate than that of Houston Control Centre.

Social Credit naturally loves B.C. Radio News. So far 16 stations have signed up. All those yawning, empty tape recorders sit waiting up in the tall grass where the yahoos grow. All must be satisfied.

Any cabinet minister who is willing to announce his luncheon order of hamburger with chips is guaranteed time to get his gums into a microphone. Several have contracted early cases of lockjaw because of over-use. All those press releases see the light of day.

It is, of course, Newspeak. The electronic jockeys, their beeping contraptions hanging from the elbow, are not given to introspection, let alone criticism or analysis. They are wholesalers of propaganda, vendors of whatever nonsense rings from the mouth of cabinet ministers caught on the way to the john.

When the sweet new headquarters for B.C. Radio News was completed, deputy public works minister A. E. Webb wrote the electric press, ending with the hope that the new quarters would be helpful in disseminating "government news." Amen, brother, amen.

Barnard Saga: Righteous End, Questionable Means

WEEK IN CITY HALL
clement chapple

Chapter Three in the Barnard estate story.

By some incredible string pulling the city of Victoria is about to take possession of the Barnard waterfront property for $150,000, a price that the vendor, Crown Assets Disposal (federal government), only days before found completely unjustifiable.

Quoting Crown Assets Disposal president Jean Miquelon, in a letter dated Jan. 6 to MP David Anderson:

"The corporation agreed to recommend sale to the city for the sum of $165,000, but indicated it could not justify accepting a lesser figure. Recent advice from the city shows that the council plans to rezone the property, a course of action which we feel to be most unethical."

Ethics and economics have been thrust aside, it seems for political expediency.

As Mayor Peter Pollen acknowledged openly Thursday in front of the Victorians, Ald. Harold Olafsor is responsible, almost single-handedly, for persuading Crown Assets, via the super-sensitive medium of MP David Groos, that the city should have that property, and it should have the property for $150,000.

The whole thing amounts, in one sense, to a coup for Pollen, a feather in Olafsoff's cap, a victory for green space, an asset for the city. Knowing the way the game is played, it would almost be a dereliction of duty for Pollen and Olafsor to have ignored the opportunity.

It also represents an example of a righteous end gained by an unrighteous means. This would not be so bad but for the suspicion that the episode will do nothing to alter the federal government's attitude towards ownership of public land.

One can presume from his public statements and his early actions as mayor that Pollen is intent on preserving the natural assets of the urban environment for the public.

But Pollen and Olafson are not infallible, they won't be around forever, nor will any other political leaders, and that's why there are laws and policies to protect righteous ends and righteous means.

What an idealist might have expected in the Barnard estate question was a reconsideration of the policy of Crown Assets, through the federal government, of selling off land to the highest bidder.

Land is a limited commodity and its intelligent control is vital to the orderly development of cities. Land is not, as the present policy suggests, something similar to obsolescent Dakota aircraft and old Fords which need to be sold off.

But there has been no reconsideration of the policy, with an alternative such as long-term leasing put forward.

Instead Crown Assets has, under political pressure, defiled its own policy. And the act was surprisingly fluid, taking place over a very short space of time.

Every instance of this kind of deal must surely whet the appetite of the unscrupulous office holder and cause much licking of the lips among those who look upon land as so much horse flesh.

There is a good possibility that the reason for Crown Assets Dispoal's quick change of mind was not simply gross political pressure. Once the corporation heard that its Vancouver lawyer, George Carruthers, had announced that the city's zoning of the Barnard estate was invalid, the corporation must have wondered exactly how it was to apply the same principle to its land holdings all across Canada.

British North America Act or not, it is difficult to visualize all federally-owned land as being without any relationship to its surroundings.

This is what Carruthers expounded, and somebody a little more war-weary might have taken George aside for a chat, then come out with an honest explanation of the points of law.

In the two or three decades ahead, which are supposed to be do-or-die years for our cities, there will undoubtedly be a better approach developed to the use of public lands. It can't come too soon.

Wanted: Able Job Plan (Not Afraid to Work)

PRESS GALLERY
peter mcnelly

When Premier Bennett reveals promised job creating programs in the Budget Speech Feb. 4, he must do so with at least a small sense of guilt.

Unemployment, the major issue of last year's legislative session, remains Bennett's albatross in 1972. Statistics Canada figures for December show 64,000 persons out of work in British Columbia — or 6.9 per cent of the labor force.

It's an improvement over December 1970, when 70,000 persons were out of jobs, but little to cheer about. Of course, unemployment is not completely Bennett's problem, having been deliberately created by Ottawa as part of an anti-inflationary campaign.

But the premier is faced with the unenviable problem of being provincially accountable for a problem he did not directly create.

Unfortunately for him, the government's star jobs plan for welfare recipients is proving a failure. This is the job opportunities program which was announced last September.

Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell is in charge of it, and in the early days he predicted it would create 15,000 jobs.

Figures released last week show how wrong Campbell was. Only 361 persons are working because of the plan and about 100 were laid off after the Christmas rush ended.

Bennett used the throne speech partly to praise the successes of government actions, but he didn't have much to say about the job opportunities program when the speech was read last Thursday.

All the speech said was the plan has "provided both opportunity and incentive for many seeking employment."

It's hard to brag about 361 jobs. Cynics could say the job opportunities program is simply a design to get people off welfare and on to unemployment insurance where the federal government foots the bill.

This, because the rule requiring employers to hire welfare recipients for at least eight weeks, seems clearly designed to insure the newly hired will run to Ottawa's arms if they get quickly fired.

Eight weeks is the minimum time a person can work before becoming eligible for UIC benefits. But this is a side issue to the fact that 7,800 persons applied for the job opportunities program.

Those among them who genuinely wanted jobs must be starting to feel cheated after employer after employer has rejected their applications.

The frustration must be doubly acute because under the plan the government undertakes to pay 50 per cent of their wages for six months. If you can't find work with a wage subsidy, what can you do?

Campbell hinted at this problem last fall when he issued a statement calling on employers to treat job opportunity certificate holders with the same dignity as anyone else.

The minister didn't go into details but it was clear he had received complaints of welfare recipients getting the bum's rush from employers who saw the certificate and figured the applicant was so unfit to work he needed a government subsidy to get a job.

It's hard to guess how many of the 7,800 certificate holders really wanted jobs when they applied for the program. In the face of Rehabilitation Minister Phil Gaglardi's crackdown on welfare eligibility requirements, many people may have asked for certificates from fear of being cut off welfare by their social workers.

No matter how you look at it, the certificate holders are getting a bad deal.

Another weakness of the program is it seems to generate jobs mainly in low paying service industries.

Service industry jobs are unstable and low paying. The people who have them fall into the category of the working poor. They make enough to get by without any promise of being able to do much better.

The best Bennett can do for the job opportunities program is to junk it as soon as possible in favor of other, more substantive projects requiring capital expenditure creating real jobs at good wages.

Why Lewis Is Needed

CHIEF LEWIS

THE PROVINCE
An Editorial

Cape Mudge Indian band Chief Lawrence Lewis should reconsider his decision to resign after the plan to turn the Cape Mudge reserve into a municipality failed to get the required majority. He shouldn't quit — he should get a medal.

Any other prospective "mayor" in the country would have counted as a great victory a favorable vote of 71.4 per cent in a 90 per cent turnout. But a 75 per cent majority was required to approve municipal status largely, according to the Chief, at the insistence of the federal Indian Affairs department. The department apparently felt the high figure was needed to make sure there'd be no future argument about the band's wishes.

But the fact is that the overwhelming view of the band has been thwarted by the high figures. There is simply no question: the band wants municipal status, and wants it badly.

The Chief and Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell who worked hard with him to give the Cape Mudge Indians the responsibility they wanted should take courage from that 71.4 per cent majority.

The Chief has done nothing to warrant his resignation. He has the confidence of his people. He has the confidence of Mr. Campbell. The Indian Affairs department can't do other than give him its confidence.

(In a recent development, Lewis has agreed to stay on as chief. He made his decision based on a band petition and on the firm possibility that the percentage required for passage of the vote will be lowered).

CBC's 'Forsyte' Starts on Sunday

TORONTO (CP) — The Whiteoaks of Jalna, a 13-part television drama series that cost $1.5 million, starts Sunday on English-language CBC stations across Canada.

And, if it bombs, producer John Trent is prepared to shoulder the blame.

"In Jalna, you'll find shots that you won't see in a normal television show, like all the wide-angle stuff," he says. "Scenes are actually played on a single, continuous-shot master.

"Either it works or it doesn't. You take the risk. If it falls on its ass, I'm the one to blame."

He's confident, however, it will meet with the success that greeted similar British productions such as the Forsyte Saga.

He spent 17 months nursing the series from its conception as a lunch-time idea to its birth as the largest project ever undertaken by the CBC. The efforts of about 140 people are involved.

Based on the 16-volume series of Jalna books by Canadian author Mazo de la Roche, Mr. Trent says he hopes it won't take more than two episodes for viewers to become familiar with characters and understand the juggling of past and present in the series.

"I think the soap opera format . . . is particularly valid," he says. "As the Forsyte Saga showed, a continuing story holds an audience."

Normally, he adds, audiences are encouraged to change channels.

"That's probably why television has been brought down to its present level. I'd like to think that, with Jalna, we're bringing viewers to a slightly higher level.

"We're asking them to think about it, to become involved with people."

Mr. Trent says Fletcher Markle, head of the CBC's television drama branch, has wanted to do the series about a southern Ontario family since 1964. The project got off the ground in September, 1970, and 11 episodes have been filmed.

"We decided to show two aspects of Canada," says Mr. Trent.

"First, what it was like in the past, which was WASP, British, the flag—that whole number. Second, we'd show today, a contemporary North American society."

While the over-all cost has been estimated at $1.5 million, the producer says he can't accurately pinpoint the final figure because of costs that will be amortized.

The series has already been sold for $260,000 to the CBC's French-language network and efforts are being made to sell it in Britain, France and Germany.

The Jalna books which give the series its origin have been translated into 13 languages and various versions of "the Whiteoaks" have been used on radio, the screen and the stage.

"The CBC has never undertaken a project as vast as this," says Mr. Trent. " . . . The crews had to come up to an international level, and they did."

STABBING SAID ACCIDENTAL

A Saanich man on trail for non-capital murder told the court Friday he stabbed his homosexual partner accidentally.

Morris Sutton, 23, is charged in the death last Sept. 10 of Donald Williams, 26, in the apartment they shared at 840 Tolmie.

He took the stand in the fifth day of his trial in B.C. Supreme Court Friday to change parts of a statement admitted in evidence the day before.

In the statement Sutton had said: "I took the knife and I stabbed him. We struggled and I believe he fell downstairs."

Court heard earlier that Sutton wrote the statement himself at the Saanich police station about an hour and a half after the stabbing. In addition Mr. Justice John Aikens had allowed in evidence Sutton's answers to questions from two Saanich detectives at the time.

NOT RIGHT

In his statement, Sutton had written that he and Williams had struggled for the knife. He believed Williams had fallen down the stairs, while he (Sutton) then had gone through the window.

Friday he said that this was not necessarily the right order of events.

In the question-and-answer period Sutton stated that he had stabbed Williams because Williams had wanted to go straight and had kicked him out.

Friday he said he had never had any intention of stabbing Williams.

He described how he went to a cabinet to get a spoon and picked up the knife while he had his back to Williams.

KILL SELF

He said his only reason for using the knife was to frighten Williams.

"I was going to turn the knife on myself if he wouldn't reconsider our relationship," he said.

He demonstrated how he swung around, saying that his outstretched right arm with the knife connected with Williams' body as he swung around.

Questioned by Bigelow, he couldn't explain the various cuts on Williams' body. He conceded that Williams' hands must have become cut when he tried to grab the knife from him.

After living with Williams for almost two years, Sutton said he began to feel unwanted when a third man moved into the apartment with him.

He didn't know whether the third man was also a homosexual.

Sutton described how Williams had ordered him to leave the apartment the night before.

"Don told me he had quit his job. We were sitting and smoking Marijuana. Don started talking about my moving out again. He said that there would be something happening at the apartment that weekend and he didn't want me to be there."

Sutton also reported what happened when Williams and he had sat in the kitchen the afternoon of the stabbing.

Sutton made coffee and the two sat at the table to talk. He said Williams had told him he had only quit his new job for two weeks; that he was going to get a new car and start dealing with MDA.

"He had apparently worked it out between him and (the third man) for the weekend," Sutton said.

Questioned by Bigelow, Sutton said that MDA, which he described as a "street drug," was a drug that could not be bought at drug stores.

FRIGHTENED

Asked why he didn't go to the bottom of the stairs when he saw Williams' body lying there, Sutton said he was too frightened.

"I couldn't tell if he was moving. I couldn't hear anything. I thought he was dead."

He added: "I'm very sorry he's dead. I never meant to kill him. I never meant to hurt him at all."

LONDON — Britain's first fully nude male pin-up, designed for the readers of a women's magazine, is to be the separated husband of women's liberation leader Germaine Greer.

Construction foreman Paul du Feu, who lived with his wife for less than three weeks after their 1968 marriage, will appear nude next April in the British edition of Cosmopolitan magazine.

But editor Joyce Hopkirk said Friday de Feu would not be fully displaying his physical charms.

"There is a very convenient shadow which falls across part of his body, but it is still very clear that he's all man," she said.

STRASBOURG, France — Norwegian explorer Thor Heyerdahl said Friday that mankind has disrupted nature's delicate machinery by creating synthetic materials, dangerously dislocating the biological equilibrium on which all life depends. Addressing a special committee of the 17-country Council of Europe during a debate on the environment, Heyerdahl said that only equilibrium in the ecosystem — the maze of interlocking biological processes supporting all living species — had made the world habitable up to now.

HEYERDAHL

But man's battle against the ecosystem — "progress" — is, through pollution caused by intensive farming, urbanization and industralization, likely to end in the destruction of civilization, he said.

NEW YORK — Dr. Michael Ramsey, the Archbishop of Canterbury, said Friday night he hoped to learn more about the so-called Jesus movement during a week he will spend in the United States. The archbishop said the Jesus movement has started to spread to Britain and "shows a boredom with the institutional church but a revival of interest in Jesus Christ."

"I'd say the traditional Christians have a lot to learn from the Jesus movement and they have a lot to learn from us."

BUZIOS, Brazil — French movie star Brigitte Bardot will have no difficulty proving her title to a plot of land in this beach resort, local authorities said Friday.

"We will never let escape this opporutnity to promote Cabo Frio (the town of which Buzios is a subdivison) through one of the best artists of recent times," Mayor Otime Dos Santos told the Rio newspaper Diario de Noticias.

The newspaper said Miss Bardot plans to build a luxury beach house on the land, given her in 1963 by Antonio Castro, Dos Santos' predecessor as mayor.

Some questions have arisen about the title to the property, but Miss Bardot hopes to clear them up next month when she comes to Brazil for the annual "Mardi Gras" celebration.

MONTREAL — Smiling despite the unaccustomed seven-degree temperature, Russ MacKinnon took his first tentative steps in more than a month Friday outside the confines of a Montreal hospital.

"It's great to be outside," said MacKinnon, 53-year-old former bush pilot from Richmond, "even though it is a little cold."

MacKinnon was flown to Montreal last month at the expense of the B.C. government after he was told in Vancouver that a desperately-needed operation to correct a blockage in his heart could not be performed immediately because of a five-month waiting list.

TORONTO — Joseph Thorson lost another round this week in his one-man campaign to have the Official Language Act of Canada invalidated.

For almost three hours Thursday, the 83-year-old Thorson, a former president of the Exchequer Court of Canada, presented a complex legal argument against a bilingual Canada before Ontario Appeal Court judges Arthur Kelly, John Brooke and John Arnup. The court dismissed his action without calling for a defence.

PALATKA, Fla. — "This morning I was 118 years old," Rev. Toby Crosby said at his big birthday party. "I got all kinds of gifts, a shirt and small blanket, I don't know, everything."

Crosby sat at one of the two benches he built for the party Friday night and looked around the Lily of the Valley Church of Our Lord at his friends.

"It was a real celebration," said his 87-year-old wife, Lula.

RAVENNA, Ohio — Jerry Rupe, 23, was sentenced Friday to six months in jail for interfering with a fireman during the Kent State University disturbances which ended in the fatal shooting of four students by Ohio national guardsmen on May 4, 1970. Rupe, of Ravenna, Ohio, was the first of 25 persons indicted to be tried late last year.

John Lee Hooker

Hooker and Company Rip Off

By WALTER McKINNON
Times Staff

John Lee Hooker and company ripped off a full house at McPherson Theatre Friday night.

But the kids didn't realize it — they gave the American Negro blues singer-guitarist a standing ovation at the end of his performance.

It is apparent they didn't know what they were missing.

Those who went to hear John Lee Hooker perform, however — at $4, $3.50 and $3 a seat — knew. All they got for their money was a raucous, over-amplified, unimaginative disaster.

Hooker didn't even appear on stage before the intermission, and he waited for 20 minutes of the second segment of the show before showing himself.

Hooker emerged as a significant factor in American folk music after the Second World War, with an exciting rhythm and blues style which quickly began to dominate the scene.

Robert Shelton of the New York Times once wrote of a Hooker performance that the singer's voice "is immediately arresting, a deep dark-leather timbered instrument that turns sullen, nostalgic, brooding or sensuous. He has a rhythmic sense that sets a firm heart-beat pulse against which he embellishes a smoldering vocal line.

"He projects his voice in an urgent and intimate fashion that almost makes the listener feel Mr. Hooker's hand is on his shoulder and the song is for him alone."

Unfortunately, that Mr. Hooker is not what Victorians at McPherson heard Friday evening.

The first 45 minutes, before an intermission, a Vancouver performer who bills himself as Bim offered his own compositions — many of which sounded disturbingly like poorly-done Janis Joplin.

Following the intermission the Hooker purists in the crowd were subjected to 20 minutes of unschooled, skull-shattering rock from a five-piece band, before the great man appeared.

And this is the backup group Hooker, when he finally stepped on stage, performed with.

Good-bye, John Lee Hooker. We've missed you.

B.C. Pen Guard Faces Heroin Trafficking Count

VANCOUVER (CP) — A guard at B.C. Penitentiary was arrested near his Vancouver home Friday and charged with possession of heroin for the purpose of trafficking.

The guard, Gaston Boule, 26, was picked up by police shortly after he drove away from his home. He has been a member of the correctional service since May, 1970.

Police said 50 capsules of heroin were seized after being found in a car.

They said their investigation has also led to the seizure of 149 capsules of barbiturates, 15 methadone tablets and 12 packages of cocaine.

Rhodesian Violence Threatens Settlement With U.K.

LONDON (Reuter) — The eruption of violence in Rhodesia threatens attempts to resolve a long-simmering dispute over the country's seizure of independence from Britain six years ago.

Rioting in several parts of the country, in which 15 black Africans died during police attempts to restore order, is disrupting official British efforts to test Rhodesian opinion on proposals for an Anglo-Rhodesian settlement.

It also has raised anxiety about the political freedom being allowed in Rhodesia for the opinion-testing operation.

The former colony broke away from Britain in 1965 with a unilateral declaration of independence. Successive negotiations foundered while Rhodesia's white-minority rulers stood against all pressures to concede eventual political control by the African majority.

Last November, British Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home flew to Salisbury for the first ministerial discussions in three years with Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith. The talks were seen as a last chance to find a solution satisfactory to Britain, the white Rhodesians and black Africa.

AGREE ON FORMULA

The two leaders finally agreed on a settlement formula Nov. 24. This included an agreement that a British commission visit Rhodesia to test the acceptability of the terms among all of the country's people.

The terms were attacked by African nationalists, members of Britain's Opposition Labor party and some churchmen black and white as not going far or fast enough to ensure eventual majority rule.

On Jan. 11, a commission headed by British Judge Lord Pearce arrived in Salisbury from London to begin its opinion-testing exercise, using several teams to tour the country.

Three days later an African was killed and nine were wounded at Shabani, 180 miles south of Salisbury, in a demonstration by African miners. It proved to be the first of several such incidents as opinion among many of the country's five million blacks appeared to be hardening against the terms.

Commission teams called off several meetings they had planned in sensitive areas.

Opponents of the Smith regime, which commands the support of most of Rhodesia's 243,000 whites, were angered Jan. 18 when police arrested a former white prime minister, Garfield Todd, and his daughter Judith vociferous supporters of the African nationalist cause.

ARREST LEADER, WIFE

Two days later police also arrested African nationalist leader Josiah Chinamano and his wife Ruth.

Rhodesia is a landlocked country of highland plateaus and modern towns spread over 150,000 square miles sandwiched between racially segregated South Africa and black-ruled Zambia.

The following are the main events in the Rhodesia quarrel:

1963—British-sponsored Rhodesia-Nyasaland Federation breaks into three parts—Southern Rhodesia, a British colony, and the African nations of Zambia and Malawi. White Rhodesians begin pushing for independence.

1961—Britain warns it will impose sanctions if Rhodesia's white attempt to break away.

1966—Rhodesia defies Britain, proclaims a "unilateral declaration of independence." Britain retailates with economic sanctions, lays down five basic principles which demand unimpeded progress towards African rule and the ending of racial discrimination.

1966 United Nations Security Council authorizes Britain to use force to stop ships delivering oil supplies for Rhodesia through the Portuguese Mozambique port of Beira. British Prime Minister Harold Wilson and Smith meet in December aboard the British warship Tiger off Gibraltar.

Rhodesian prime minister rejects British terms, and Wilson says there can be "no independence before majority (African) rule."

1968 Wilson and Smith meet again, on board the British warship Fearless in October, also off Gibraltar. They remain deadlocked. A month later, British minister George Thomson goes to Rhodesia but fails to win concessions which Britain regards as vital.

1969 Landslide vote approves new apartheid-style Rhodesian constitution ensuring white rule. A land tenure act divides country into white and black areas.

1970 Rhodesia declares itself a republic. Smith and his governing Rhodesian Front party are buttressed by an overwhelming general election victory, winning all 50 white seats in Parliament.

1971 British emissary Lord Goodman begins a series of contacts in Salisbury in June. Some progress is reported. British government decides to continue economic sanctions in November, but Foreign Secretary Douglas-Home announces plans to visit Rhodesia for more negotiations. He arrives Nov. 15, and agreement is announced Nov. 24.

The following month Methodist Bishop Abel Muzorewa announces the formation in Rhodesia of the African National Council to oppose the settlement proposals.

1972 The Pearce commission arrives in Salisbury Jan. 11, to begin testing opinion. Violence in Shabani is followed by African unrest in Gwelo, Salisbury, and Umtali in what is described as the worst outbreak of violence in 10 years.

Rhodesian police arrest Todd, his daughter Judith, Chinamano, treasurer of the African National Council, and his wife.

On Jan. 21, Smith pledges to stick honorably to the settlement negotiated with Britain but warns Africans if they reject the terms it would be taken to mean they prefer the current system.

DOG ARREST is made in Gwelo, Rhodesia, during riots to protest that country's recent settlement with Britain. Police made extensive use of dogs while trying to restore order among rampaging blacks.

Swiss Deny Hughes Account

NEW YORK (AP) — Lawyers for Howard Hughes have disclosed a letter from a Swiss bank that says the industrialist did not hold an account in which cheques were deposited to pay for material in a disputed autobiography.

McGraw-Hill Inc. has said the cheques were to pay Hughes for a forthcoming autobiography compiled by writer Clifford Irving. A telephone voice introduced as Hughes told reporters Jan. 9 that he never had met Irving.

The letter from the Swiss Credit Bank of Zurich, disclosed during court proceedings here Friday, said the cheques from McGraw-Hill "were not cashed by Mr. Howard R. Hughes, the owner of the Hughes Tool Co. of Houston, Tex., nor were they credited to an account of Mr. H. R. Hughes at our bank."

Informed about the bank letter, McGraw-Hill and Life magazine issued a joint statement saying: "The matter is a complicated one" and declined further comment pending their own investigation.

McGraw-Hill planned to publish the Irving book March 10, and Life planned to release it in serial form beginning Feb. 11. Both have set back these dates indefinitely.

In another development Friday, state Supreme Court Justice Gerald Culpin temporarily barred further distribution of a second purported autobiography of Hughes.

However, Culpin said he would take no more action on a motion to enjoin permanently distribution of the book, My Life and Opinions, without an affidavit from Hughes affirming that he did not authorize the material.

A lawyer for the publishers, Hippocrene Books Inc., said about 20,000 copies of the purported Hughes memoirs, edited by Robert P. Eaton, already have been sold. Excerpts from the book appear in the current edition of the Ladies Home Journal.

The court action came as part of a series of legal battles mounted by Rosemont Enterprises Inc., a Nevada corporation that claims to have obtained from Hughes exclusive rights to publish autobiographical material.

Meanwhile, in Zurich legal authorities have made contact with Interpol over what is believed to be a possible swindle concerning payment for the purported biography of billionaire Howard Hughes, reliable sources said today.

The district attorney's office in Zurich has issued international warrants through Interpol to trace a number of persons engaged in opening a Zurich bank account into which $650,000 for the biography was paid, they reported.

It was not clear, whether these were arrest warrants or letters sent through Interpol asking other national police forces to enquire into this case.

The district attorney in charge of the case said today he has "absolutely no comment" to make on this matter.

But police here said the district attorney's office has begun an inquiry into the identity of the person who opened an account at the Swiss Credit Bank in the name of H. R. Hughes.

The sources declined to say who was named in the warrants from the Zurich authorities, but they indicated that the author of the biography, writer Clifford Irving, was not among them.

Many Suspicious Of Job Figures

By The Canadian Institute of Public Opinion

Almost half the Canadian public (45 per cent) is confused about the unemployment situation, and claims that the government is not giving out sufficient information about it. When these men and women are asked to explain why they think the government is withholding facts from the public, replies reveal a good deal of suspicion and cynicism. The largest segment finds the unemployment reports confusing, and say that the figures are always being changed one way or another. Others refer repeatedly to a government's need to keep some of the facts away from the people or suffer loss of confidence. Many complain that it is the government's own policies which have caused unemployment.

Across the country 28 per cent of the voters feel that they have sufficient information on the unemployment crises. Fully a half of these Canadians refer to the regular publications of unemployment statistics, or feel that the opposition and press media get at the truth of the matter.

It is among those in the homes of labor or on farms, where greatest criticism for the government lies in regard to its information on unemployment, with about a two-to-one ratio of those who say the facts are being withheld, rather than given out.

The question:

"Do you think the Trudeau government is telling the public all it should know about the unemployment situation?"

National reactions and those within the main occupational segments are shown below. It will be seen that if, as most voters predict, unemployment will be one of the main issues in the next federal election, the government has some very definite problems to face.

	Yes	No	Undecided
CANADA	28%	45%	27%
Executive: Professional	36	41	23
Sales: Clerical	38	39	23
Labor	24	46	30
Farm: Other	23	51	26

This is how Canadians explain their reactions:

No, not telling us enough about unemployment (45%) because:

Reports too contradictory; too confused; too optimistic; figures aren't correct; always juggling figures	36%
No government tells the people everything; less people know the better for the government; try to hide facts	22
They don't want us to know the truth; their own policies caused unemployment	9
They've done nothing to help; don't know what to do themselves	5
Other reasons	9
Can't say why	20
(Some gave more than one)	101%

Yes, are telling us enough about unemployment (28%) because:

The figures are published every month; people can see for themselves; press gives good coverage	50%
Believe they're doing a good job; Trudeau is very frank; he tells the bad news as well as the good	13
They tell us just what they want us to hear; it's government policy to distort facts	8

FLU HITS HARD IN THE SOUTH

By The Associated Press

An outbreak of flu has forced the closing of schools in many parts of the United States and has hampered operations of state government in South Dakota. But officials say it is not as severe as the siege three winters ago.

As the virus has affected mainly children, many hospitals have allowed only adults to visit flu patients and have restricted visiting hours to curb the spread of the illness.

Most of the 843 persons the National Centre for Disease Control says have been killed by the flu this winter, however, were old or chronically ill. The death toll was 268 higher than normal as of Jan. 15.

Many of the affected areas have been hit by the Hong Kong flu, which struck many areas of the United States in 1968-1969 and killed 27,900 persons. In other areas milder types of flu have been reported.

SOME STILL IMMUNE

Absenteeism generally has been lower among workers than school children, and health officials say this indicates many adults who caught the virus three years ago still are immune.

In South Dakota, however, where a regional outbreak of the Hong Kong flu is spreading, about 20 per cent of the employees of state government about 2,000 workers are on sick leave.

Widespread or regional outbreaks of the flu have been reported this year in 20 other states from the East Coast to the Rockies. Officials in some states say the disease is still spreading while others report a decline.

Conviction Appealed

The B.C. Court of Appeal this week reserved judgement in the case of Siegfried Marquardt, 39, of 2841 Sea View, Saanich, who is appealing his conviction on 12 counts of fraud in Victoria county court on Jan. 11, 1971.

Marquardt, free on a $20,000 surety bail, was sentenced to two years imprisonment.

H. A. Maclean, Nathan Nemetz and J. D. Taggart, the three appeal court judges, will hand down judgment after they consider 3½ days of argument by prosecution and defence.

The arguments centred around whether a person could defraud a company of which he was the principal.

Marquardt was convicted of defrauding V.I. Shipyards Ltd. of money for a project to convert an old U.S. navy vessel, the Robert Emery, into a floating marine entertainment centre for San Francisco. The vessel has since been sold for scrap.

Biharis Fear Death

MIRPUR (Reuter) — People in this non-Bengali Dacca suburb, now a beleaguered community in Bangladesh, fear they will be killed if the Indian army leaves the area.

They claim that many have been killed already.

A questionnaire they are circulating among themselves, asking if they want to be "repatriated" to India or Pakistan, reflects the concern among these non-Bengalis that they have no future in Bangladesh and will be killed if the Indians are withdrawn.

Bangladesh police, mostly former members of the Mukti Bahini guerrilla forces, yesterday imposed a curfew in parts of Mirpur, which is about seven miles from Dacca. They claim that the half million people still living there hold 30,000 weapons given to them last year by the Pakistan army, with which they are accused of sympathizing.

Repercussions Have Started

Your Taxes

By I. H. ASPER

Two news events this week, though geographically separated by several thousand miles, serve to bring into sharp focus the issue created by the succession duty system six provinces intend to introduce this year.

The first event is purely symbolic of the problem. When one of our wealthiest industrialists, K. C. Irving, discloses that he has left Canada, and that announcement happens to be made from Nassau, the best-known North American tax haven, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that Irving's move may have been influenced by the Maritime provinces' decision to introduce a provincial death tax.

If the fear of death taxes did in fact encourage Irving's departure, he joins a growing list of distinguished and affluent people who have in recent years departed these shores to take up residence in other areas where no death taxes are levied.

It was to prevent a trend toward a mass exodus of capital that the federal government abolished estate taxes at the same time as it introduced the capital gains tax.

However, six provinces, the four Atlantic and the two Prairie governments, have stepped in to fill the vacuum and the repercussions are yet to be fully appreciated.

The other tax event of the week was in Winnipeg. Because of Manitoba's decision to levy a succession duty tax on the assets of non-residents, at least one trust company was moving those securities it held for non-residents outside of the province and into a tax-free jurisdiction, such as Alberta.

Whether or not the trust companies admit the transferring of assets, it has in fact already started. Both these incidents should cause the provincial governments involved in the succession duty debacle to pause and reflect on what they are doing.

When any country levies taxes at high rates and becomes uncompetitive with other jurisdictions, it risks losing its entrepreneurs to the other area. There's no magic in this, it just happens.

The peculiarity of the proposed new succession duty laws that sparked the Manitoba story is the government's statement that the tax will be charged "on the value of all property of the deceased at the date of his death which is situated in the province, whether the deceased died domiciled or resident in or outside the province and whether his beneficiaries are domiciled or reident in or outside the province."

In plain language, the proposed law says that if a resident of Detroit owns shares or bonds in a Winnipeg company dies, and leaves those securities to his son in Los Angeles, the government of Manitoba would levy a succession duty. Now, no one can argue with the government's legal right to tax these assets if it wants to, but the wisdom of it is another thing.

The resident of Detroit simply responds by selling his Manitoba investments and investing his capital in a place which doesn't levy a tax on non-resident investments.

There is no shortage of places where one can put his money to work on that basis. What is of more concern is that the provinces which impose the tax in this way will become quite unattractive as places in which to invest.

When asked if he had understood the full implications of the proposed method of taxing non-resident investment, Manitoba Finance Minister Saul Cherniack implied that the six provinces had not considered this aspect.

But while he promised to study the question, he would give no assurance that the plan would be changed. Regardless of how politicians deny it, the exodus is now on. It's a veritable bonanza for Alberta which has stayed aloof from the plan.

While the six provinces are reviewing their thinking, they might also reconsider the wisdom of other aspects of their plan. For example, they propose to tax gifts made from husband to wife, and with the exception of the first $150,000 (compared to $500,000 in Ontario) they will tax inheritances between husband and wife.

This wipes out the 1968 estate and gift tax reform which, in recognition of the status of women in marriage, had exempted from tax all transfers of assets between married men and women.

That reform was not inspired by tax generosity from government, but, rather, by the recognition that the modern marriage is a financial as well as a domestic partnership.

There are disturbing signs that we are moving irreversibly toward an Alice in Wonderland tax maze. While most commentators have warned of this type no one seems to have listened. That being so, it will become a case of survival of the fittest.

Translated freely, that means the province with the most attractive tax climate will attract the most entrepreneurial and developmental capital.

At this writing, Alberta, with no gift tax, no death tax, no sales tax and a reasonably low income tax rate, looks like a winner.

Deepest Well Drilled

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Parker Drilling Co. of Tulsa said today it has completed drilling the world's deepest exploratory well for natural gas or oil.

The hole is more than five miles deep — at 28,500 feet — the target depth for the Ralph Lowe Estate No. 1-17 wildcat, near Fort Stockton in West Texas.

R. L. Parker, president of the contract drilling firm, said that testing for possible discovery of gas or oil was not immediately possible because hydrostatic pressure of the drilling mud would unseat the packers.

The Parker crew had been adding to its world depth record since Nov. 5, 1971, when the diamond-studded drill bit passed 25,500 feet and broke the record previously established by a Placid Oil Co. dry hole in Southern Louisiana.

Rate Lowered

MONTREAL (CP) — Royal Trust announced this week a reduction of one quarter of 1 per cent in the mortgage interest rate for all houses and duplexes to a minimum of 8¾ per cent from 9 per cent.

Algoma

The Algoma Steel Corp. Ltd. report 1971 operating income totalled $12.82 million, down almost $11 million from 1970.

Net earnings for the year included $21.5 million from the sale of its substantial block of shares of Canada Steamship Lines. The extraordinary gain was worth $1.85 a share to Algoma.

Net earnings of $34.32 million ($2.96) compared with $23.58 million ($2.03) during 1970.

Net sales were $271.8 million during 1971 and $257.36 million in 1970 on reduced volume of production and shipments.

Imperial

Earnings of Imperial Oil Ltd. during 1971 were almost one-third greater than 1970 earnings.

Net profit amounted to $136 million ($1.06 a share) compared with $105 million (82 cents) during 1970.

Total 1971 revenue was estimated at $1.9 billion compared with $1.71 billion during 1970.

W. O. Twaits, chairman, said a major factor has increased crude oil sales, particularly to export markets, and an increase in the price of crude.

Are Galleries Necessary?

ART
glenn howarth

Good artists are self-critical and there are times when anxiety about their art form outstrips inspiration; they suffer apostasy, a crisis of belief.

The Dadaists institutionalized hoeplessness and exhibited garbage. By-passing the gallery, they had their first exhibition in a public washroom. That was after the First World War.

The Dadaist revolution, half politic and half aesthetic, is still with us. Artists worry about the function of their work in the community. Many wonder if there were not another means to reach the public, besides the gallery.

The Image Bank in Vancouver uses newsletters, postcards. Some artists look to comic books, others to books of reproductions. The list of artists seeking a by-pass to the gallery is a long one, stretching across the continent.

It comes as no surprise that galleries too are worried and are self-consciously evaluating their role.

I had business at the Public Gallery and while I was there asked Colin Graham, the director, for the return of a book, Dana Atchley's Space Atlas, a limited edition of artists' reproductions that sought the alternative in book form.

Graham had recently moved his office from the first floor to the second and during the move, the book had been misplaced. He was anxious about finding it when I reassured him that there was no hurry, it would turn up in time. "In an art gallery, it will be safe."

Graham thought for a moment as we walked out of his office. He delighted me by saying, "I wonder if art galleries will be necessary in the future? Perhaps artists will work directly for civic governments creating objects and environments for public squares and parks without the gallery as mediators."

"I don't see that happening for a while," I replied. "While gallerys don't work right, they will stay."

"Yes," Graham said. "They don't work right. The surface appears calm, but underneath there is a change taking place." He talked about the culture hot-bed in the eastern United States. I quote him freely.

New York galleries were struck by artists sitting in and protesting that the galleries were not serving them. The Whitney, which each year holds the most important jury show in the U.S., was attacked by feminists demanding that half the participants in the salon be women, and Black Power wanted half the artists to be Negro. The museum obviously is in the public eye and a good arena for politics.

Attendence is soaring. Though the Metropolitan has an appropriation of $163 million, costs continue to rise and this museum has begun to charge admission. The museum of Modern Art is overcrowded and it becomes increasingly difficult to enter into a contemplative relationship with an object. Visiting the Prado in Spain, you must look out over 12 heads to see an art object.

Gallery attendence was up 30 per cent in Victoria last year.

That art galleries are worried and embroiled amidst growing popularity is puzzling to me. And that artists should be disaffected! What will evolve from this heat of reaction, I can only guess.

The January newsletter of the Vancouver Public Gallery has taken tabloid newspaper form. Introducing the format, Director Tony Emery explained that it would improve communication with members of the gallery's parish. His use of the word parish struck me hard and reverberated for a long time. Comparisons between church and gallery are easy to construct.

The comparison might start with high attendance on Sunday afternoon, women's committees, bazaars, charitable donations and might end with a quote from American critic William Gaddis, "Religion steps in when the magic of art fails." The pews might be filling but artists. . . .

'Jean Brodie' A Prime Role

One of the "plum" roles for women in recent stage literature is the dangerously forceful, spider-like Jean Brodie.

The role in the move version of Jay Presson Allen's play, The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie, brought British actress Maggie Smith an Oscar.

In the Victoria Theatre Guild production which opens next Saturday at Langham Court the role is being played by professional Canadian actress Patricia Leith.

Miss Leith, who spent her childhood and early theatre years in Duncan and Victoria, was accepted at London's Royal Academy of Dramatic Art in her teens and subsequently acted professionally in Britain, the United States and Casada.

She is currently a member of the UVic theatre faculty and has been seen in several UVic productions, including Victoria Fair and the UVic-Theatre Guild production of Strindberg's The Father.

Jean Brodie is being directed by the husband-wife team of Barbara and Michael Meiklejohn, well-known for their theatre work both here and in Ottawa where they were prominent for many years.

Others in the cast are Marion Jenkins, Jack Droy, Linda Murdoch, Kathy Popham, Rosalind Scott, Betsy Burke, Mary-Jane Scott, David Dunsmuir and Colin Skinner.

The small girls are Gretchen Krich, Robyn Richards, Meredith Dunsmuir, Libby McMinn, Jeannie Hopkins, Helen Nicholson and Valerie Denford.

The box office opens at Eaton's on Wednesday. The play runs Jan. 29-Feb. 5 with curtain at 8:15 p.m.

GUEST DIRECTOR FOR SYMPHONY

Victoria Symphony Orchestra will be guest-directed for the only time this season when Simon Streatfeild steps upon the podium for the first 1972 pair of concerts, Jan. 30 and 31.

Streatfeild is a major musical figure in Vancouver where he has been successively, principal viola, assistant conductor and acting music director and resident conductor of Vancouver Symphony Orchestra.

In addition the English-born musician is music director and conductor of the Vancouver Bach Choir and his conducting assignments have also included the Vancouver Festival, CBC Music Festival, CBC Vancouver Chamber Orchestra and, in 1970, the City of Birmingham Symphony in England.

Last spring he distinguished himself in two concerts of the Beethoven series. "The performance of the Symphony No. 8 under Simon Streatfeild was the trimphant climax of the Beethoven series," wrote critic Ian Docherty.

Streatfeild received his musical education at the Royal College of Music. He was principal viola with the London Symphony Orchestra for nine years during which time he recorded the Telemann Viola Concerto for L'Oiseau Lyre Records.

In return visits to England, since joining the Vancouver Symphony in 1965 — he has conducted the Royal Choral Society and concerts for BBC as well as concerts in Holland with the Bach Choir.

For the Victoria Symphony concerts he has chosen Malcolm Arnold's English Dances Sets I and II, Vaughan Williams' Fantasia on a theme by Thomas Tallis, Four Sea Interludes from Benjamin Britten's opera, Peter Grimes and Dvorak Symphony No. VI in D major.

Music Program At Craigdarroch

A program that will be presented in Banff in April, at the annual conference of the Canadian Federation of Music Teachers, is being performed Friday at Craigdarroch Castle.

Second in a series covering four centuries of song, artists Catherine Young, soprano, and Winifred Scott, pianist, will present a lieder recital.

Songs from the works of Schubert, Richard Strauss, Brahms, Hindlemith and Hugo Wolfe have been selected.

At the April conference Winifred Scott, Registrar of Victoria Conservatory of Music, will also give a lecture on the art of piano accompaniment.

Charting the Path to Freedom in Alien Land

By ANTHONY JENKINS

"I was once part of the flow, never thinking of myself as a presence. Then I looked in the mirror and decided to be free." All the leading characters in V. S. Naipaul's new novel arrive at this turning point. Their

IN A FREE STATE, by V. S. Naipaul. Collins. $6.95.

"mirror" is an alien country, a place where they find themselves in a social minority and where they must come to terms with themselves and with those around them.

When is one in a free state or, for that matter, in a state of freedom? In one's own country one is "part of the flow," sleeping out at night on the pavements of Bombay or sipping sherries at an Oxford college. But is that freedom?

Put a man, an Indian or a Briton, into a society ruled by strangers, and his freedom, or lack of it, will depend upon his adaptability to his new surroundings.

The brilliance of this book is its indirection. It is difficult enough to understand oneself let alone others. Freedom is as hard to achieve for a white man as it is for a black. By showing the agonies and confusions of his characters, the ebb and flow of their minds, Naipaul makes us see that freedom is not something that can be put in (pardon the pun) black and white terms.

The book opens with an episode from an actual diary. Naipaul is on a Greek ship travelling to Alexandria. Among the passengers is a tramp. He stands out from the "flow" of the other travellers by his shabbiness and by his peculiar Englishness. His eccentricity marks him as a victim.

We are never told how the tramp has insulted his cabin-mates (two Lebanese merchants and an Austrian student), nor is their revenge on him particularly violent. But they do threaten his dignity, and a greater violence always lurks beneath the jocular surface. By the end of the voyage, the individual passengers sink back into the crowd, but only for a moment. For already we see them beginning to group into new equations as they stand in their national groups in order to go through Customs.

This episode sounds trivial in synopsis. Its impact comes through Naipaul's style. His prose is factual, understated in its cool balances and its lack of resonance. He never judges. Neither the reader nor the characters are being organized around a particular thesis. One must reach one's own conclusions about the meaning of all this.

And the full meaning is not available until the end of the book. Naipaul pursues his theme through five movements, to which the first (this episode from the diary) stands as a prelude.

The second movement concerns an Indian houseboy who arrives with his Bengali master in Washington. Santosh's troubles begin as he steps on board the airliner. Among the business-suits his ordinary Bombay clothes make him an outsider.

In Washington he is the prisoner of his own confusion. The Negress who cleans the neighboring apartment worries him with her strange sexuality, and he is ashamed of his feelings towards a member of a race that he has learned to think of as unclean. The hippies who chant their hymns to Krishna are an uneasy half-way house; they are obviously acting out an alien ritual.

Santosh finds momentary ease with the owner of an Indian restaurant who (to our ears) never says what he means but whose evasions are perfectly clear to him.

Again violence encircles the bewilderment at the centre of this story. For beyond Santosh's block of territory, the Negroes pillage and burn in the streets, and this acts as a correlative to the Indian's frustration.

In the other two stories, violence comes to the forefront. A West Indian, in London, finds that a recurring nightmare of his youth has caught up with him. His frustrated attempts to turn his brother into a professional man (someone secure) make him want to kill those who stand in his way. But who are his enemies? The teenage thugs who wreck his café? The white liberal who befriends him and destroys him with his patronage? His brother who lies to him and who marries an English girl? Or the man himself?

The main story, "In A Free State," says the same things from another angle. Now the aliens are white. Bobby is a homosexual and has found himself through Africa. Linda is married to a failure; her stay in this new state is but a halting-place on her trek South.

As they travel by car through the countryside wracked by a coup d'etat, their uneasy alliance continually shifts, as do their attitudes to the country itself. Liberal feelings explode into hatred in the face of disorganization and cruelty, and prejudices elide into tolerance.

The book closes with another sequence from the travel diary. Naipaul is again in Egypt, and what he sees there compels him to act, to speak out against mindless bullying. But the victims are not grateful for his intervention, and the victimizers are surprised that he should create such a fuss.

Perhaps freedom is not possible after all. Egypt, which frames the whole book, becomes a symbol of this. An ancient, polyglot society, it may once have been assured of itself and free when it alone ruled the world. In the primitive tombs of ordinary men are paintings which portray a vision of innocence, where the water has been reduced to "a blue-green chevron" in a flat, brown landscape. But perhaps such simplicity was never actual. It is something for the grave.

This is a book to read again and again. In it, Naipaul has found a poignant and disturbing way of letting us experience for ourselves the dilemma of freedom. The world has been, and will be, full of intolerance for as long as there are men in it.

BRAITHWAITE
. . . funny and bitter

Nuggets Are Hard To Find

By DON VIPOND

Most any writer who has tried will admit that putting humor on paper is the toughest aspect of a tough-enough trade.

One problem is that when an author isn't funny, he's not just unfunny but frequently downright irritating.

Just so with Robert Thomas Allen, who has produced what his publisher is pleased to call One Man's Defiant Defence of the Older Generation. It isn't quite that bad but it is 270 pages of first-person ramblings and that's a long time for anyone to dominate the conversation.

THE NIGHT WE STOLE THE MOUNTIE'S CAR, by Max Braithwaite. McClelland and Stewart. $6.95.

WE GAVE YOU THE ELECTRIC TOOTHBRUSH, by Robert Thomas Allen. Doubleday. $7.50.

Maybe you've had an aunt, uncle or some surprise visitor park themselves on your chesterfield and never pause for a deep breath for what can be a very long evening. If so, you've got the idea.

Not that Allen isn't occasionally entertaining. It's just there are not enough nuggets in the lode to make it worth mining unless you're an Allen fan.

Max Braithwaite, on the other hand, has done better with a similar casual first-person style and for two reasons.

His story is firmer, being an account of his early years of marriage while a school teacher on the Prairies during the Depression.

If that doesn't sound like the most hilarious of settings, it wasn't, and this is the second strength of the book. Max mixes the funny moments with the bitter ones and it comes out more like life.

You have to wonder just how much like life though when he gives a factual setting to what must be one of the world's oldest jokes about capsules for constipation "why they would have done me more good if . . ." etc.

That sort of silliness aside, Braithwaite has a disarming frankness and is pretty funny at times too.

Wanted: Footnotes To History

By JAMES McCOOK

After nearly 2,000 pages of Mackenzie, Franklin and Hind in these handsome volumes it may seem ingratitude to publisher Mel Hurtig to long for more.

After all, Hurtig here continues his useful work of making more readily available the day-to-day records of men who traced the boundaries and resources of Canada. There's nothing like the original, the on-the-spot impressions of travellers who noted down at the close of weary days the sights they had seen.

The shortage is in explanation. Let it be admitted that brisk and informative forewords have been written for the books by learned men. They are helpful in setting the scene before the reprinted journals begin, but they are inadequate.

What is needed to make these books and their companion volumes more helpful to the reader and to general

VOYAGES FROM MONTREAL TO THE FROZEN AND PACIFIC OCEANS, by Alexander Mackenzie. Hurtig. $20.

NARRATIVE OF A SECOND EXPEDITION TO THE SHORES OF THE POLAR SEA, by John Franklin. Hurtig. $25.

NARRATIVE OF THE CANADIAN RED RIVER EXPEDITION OF 1857, by Henry Youle Hind. Hurtig. $25.

Canadian appreciation of history is a series of footnotes to satisfy curiosity.

What, for example, became of the Eskimo Augustus, the heroic guide who saved his employer Franklin from the murderous rapacity of other Eskimos on the Arctic shore? Surely Augustus could be traced. After parting with him in 1827, Franklin was pleased to record that pay due Augustus and another Eskimo would be paid to them annually by the Hudson's Bay Company. It would be surprising if the company records could not have produced a note to complete the story of this remarkable personality.

Students of Sir Alexander Makenzie's voyages have established from his journal the location of places he mentions as of special interest, danger or hardship. To relate them to present-day towns, highways or bridges by instant footnotes would make the book come alive. Where, for example, was that ford where Mackenzie carried the Indian, weakened with illness, across on his back? It would be interesting to visit it some day.

Whoever reads Mackenzie, whether for the first time or the tenth, will marvel again at the ability in planning, the skill in leadership and the iron determination which took him to the Arctic and Pacific Oceans. The measure of Mackenzie is also the measure of the lords of the fur-trade. Prof. Roy Daniells in his helpful introduction notes that Mackenzie considered his explorations as interludes in his trading career.

Dr. Leslie Neatby, author of books on Arctic exploration, states in his introduction to the Franklin narrative that the British sailor's second expedition to the North proved that he was no muddler. The Admiralty, however, appears to have had doubts about his prudence which is hardly surprising in light of the disaster of his first overland expedition of 1819-22 in which half his party died.

Out of this journal of the second expedition comes the picture of an admirable commander who from 1825 to 1827 maintained the good spirits of his men, displayed saint-like patience in dealing with thieving Eskimos and developed such practical equipment as special boats built to his design which served well in exploration of the northern coast. In 1845 Franklin led his last — and domed — expedition into the Arctic, by sea this time.

Prof. Hind went on his explorations on leave from the University of Toronto. His name is not as famous as that of Mackenzie or Franklin. Although he headed a Canadian government expedition on the prairies about the same time as Capt. John Palliser led a British government expedition in the same area, Palliser's name is more often heard today.

Hind had the Canadian viewpoint, the attitude of a man visiting an extension of his own country. He enthused as Palliser and Franklin would never do, as when he let himself go in describing the beauties of the Riding Mountain range in Manitoba. His interest in the Indians was such that he jotted down everything about them, including the fact that they still believed in "the happy hunting grounds" as heaven.

Indian ponies employed in running buffalo were much praised but the one Hind rode was unruly and had a mouth like "sole leather." White men had to teach some Plains Indians how to fish in their lakes — an art they had not bothered to acquire in the buffalo country.

Hind missed nothing in his journals and perhaps Judge Roy St. George Stubbs of Winnipeg, in his introduction, is a trifle unkind in saying Hind "told too much rather than too little, thus dulling the edge of his narrative with too many words."

After a hundred years, a garrulous explorer becomes a welcome guest. Hind is no Pepys but on the prairies he may be the next best thing.

Do It Slow and Cool

TIPS FOR THE HOME SMOKER

By PETER MEDWID

How do you like your fish — smoked, plain or spiced?

Do you prefer sweet pickle smoked meat or a slightly spiced taste for octopus or squid?

If fishing and hunting and "smoking" the results is part of your game then the Home Book of Smoke-Cooking should be a handy reference and guide for the novice and a it's-time-to-try-something-new for the old timers.

And if you think meat and fish are the only things to smoke . . . just sink your teeth into smoked cheese, nuts, seeds, eggs, frogs' legs and the piece de resistance . . . smoked blueberries.

THE HOME BOOK OF SMOKE COOKING, by Jack Sleight and Raymond Hull. Geo. J. McLeod Ltd. $9.95.

The book is written by Vancouver's Raymond Hull (The Art of Making Wine and The Peter Principle) and Jack Sleight, a Seattle real estate broker renowned in the area for the delicacies that come out of his smoke oven.

The information for brining is exhaustive but the newcomer to the "old-new" art of smoking may well be advised to try the dry-cure method. The book gives the basic recipe (salt and brown sugar, on a two-to-one-basis, onion and garlic powder, pepper and saltpetre) but there are others which should be worth experimenting with.

It doesn't cost a fortune to get started — the cost of the book itself may indicate this — just a small drum, hibachi or domed barbecue. The barbecues with the square hoods may also be used if you place a heat-resistant cover across the face.

Fire up the briquettes, keep adding hardwood chips — alder or any fruit tree cuttings — and you are in business.

Remember . . . get the meat you are smoking, whether it is salmon, oysters, meat, whatever . . . in the highest notch possible. The slower and cooler the smoke, the better tasting the end result.

For the beer hound who likes to chew on jerky there is a chapter on selection, cutting, curing and smoking . . . and it will "keep for years at room temperature."

And for the guy who wants to impress the neighborhood there is a menu and full instructions for choosing, preparing and serving 25 different dishes for 300 people.

Happy Smoking!

Explorer with Guts, Ability

By TORCHY ANDERSON

He had no drumming publicity, no handy transport between rivers; he lacked airfilled rafts, outboards, maps and white companions. Two hundred hears ago Samuel Hearne was told by his Hudson's Bay Co. bosses that there might be a "copper mine" far north and west of what is now Churchill. They added that he better check for an ocean passage east and west around Canada.

Hearne, suddenly snatched from a company ship, was sent to explore a rumor. He was sent without white companions, with virtually no equipment, into a country unknown in its entirety—even to the Indians. But Hearne had guts and the ability to adjust to the way of the natives. When he left the sea to explore the arctic wilderness he was 24. He left us one of the best books about early exploration in Canada.

In the period of his service at sea for the company a suspicion arose in England that the Honourable Company might have riches other than furs in their vast domain, riches that they were keeping quiet about, riches that included a copper mine and a short route to Cathay.

Hearne made two false starts from Fort Prince of Wales (now Churchill), each time being double-crossed by Indians who had no idea how to get to the "mine" and whose sole purpose was to make what they could out of the venture. Then he met Matonabbee and in December 1770 started the trip that was to take him to the Coppermine River and belated fame. He walked some 5,000 miles in 18 months with an Indian band, living as an Indian and travelling as an Indian.

To understand the magnitude of his achievement a reader should take a map of northern Canada and trace a route west along the edge of the tree line to the vicinity of the Dubant River. Then turn north and west to the (now) Coppermine River. Trace his return branching westward to cross Great Slave Lake among the islands at the eastern end, thence eastward to join the outward route.

M. G. Hurtig of Edmonton has reproduced Hearne's original book, complete with the explorer's maps and illustrations and with the old type face.

This splendid book joins the ranks of the other fine Hurtig reproductions. It was printed in Japan.

In the explorations of the Canadian West names of Northwest Company men such as Mackenzie, Fraser, Thompson are better known today. For many years the older company trusted that fur would come to them. The hustling Norwestern went out after it.

Sometimes one reads accounts that question Hearne's presence at an Indian slaughter of Eskimos. It must be remembered that he was a lone white man, entirely dependent on his Indians to get him there and back.

One has to search history to find a man who went farther into the unknown, lacking nearly everything an explorer needed. Reproduction of his book, which was read throughout Europe, is a fitting tribute to Samuel Hearne.

Work That Degrades Mind and Body

By ROGER STONEBANKS

The degradation of working on your knees, cutting coal in a 2½-foot high tunnel, is easy to understand.

Less easy, but degrading still, is working in a superficially-civilized factory beside the mindless conveyor belt, or being a link in an assembly line where the beginning and end cannot be seen.

A WORKING LIFE, by Polly Toynbee. Musson. $7.95.

Polly Toynbee helps us understand this with her glimpse of working-class life in England today.

This is an excellent — but too brief — and accurate picture of working men and working women. It updates Road to Wigan Pier (1937) but lacks George Orwell's social insights.

It isn't a middle class "slumming" expedition to the other side of town. Miss Toynbee, daughter of Philip, granddaughter of Arnold) lets the reader draw conclusions before putting her own in at the end.

She works (and visits) in good factories and had, and observes that all are "terrible and deadening places to work in."

The factory system degrades both mind and body, making a human being into a machine tending another machine. Only self-deception saves society from the inevitable — revolution. Workers aren't miserable — but they aren't happy. They are bored. Only in a steel mill (an impressive place to visit) did she detect pride in work.

The roots of class antagonisms and revolutionary dogmas lie in industrialization. Not all the goodwill, bonhomie, benevolent legislation and union contracts can eradicate the inherent evil of people performing mindless tasks for half their waking hours of most of their adult lives. To understand this is more important than to experience it.

The easiest way to statistically measure the wound which industrialization has inflicted is by work injuries — 146 million days lost in Britain each year, compared with three million days lost because of strikes. One in every three coal miners, for example, has an accident or industrial disease every year.

The dust jacket of A Working Life puts it another way — the sad eyes of a working-class girl, and the dead hands of the factory time clock.

Times have changed, Women don't work in mines, and neither do children, but 160 mines still use pit ponies. Unions are no longer criminal conspiracies and they have a political arm through the Labor Party. Housing has improved (thanks to state intervention), there is state medical care, unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation and the other trappings of the welfare state.

The beast has been tamed, but it is still a beast, whether it is under private ownership or state ownership.

Miss Toynbee puts it all very bluntly:

"If all the people who have had little control over their destiny and are now in dead-end jobs, living in horrible towns all over the country, suddenly became aware that their intelligence had been more or less determined at the age of three by their poor environment, that their education had been geared to streaming them into appropriate categories to the needs of industry and society, that however comprehensive their children's education might be, they stand no real chance of having a very different life either, that their standard of living will rise at an increasingly slow rate, and that the gap between themselves and the rich is likely to widen and not to narrow, there would be revolution.

"It is not just because people do not realize these facts and the full significance of them that they do not rebel. It is because the facts are too unbearable to face up to. Who would really believe that they have no power over their own destiny? Predestination has always been the hardest doctrine to swallow, and anyone telling them that they have never had a choice is likely to get punched in the jaw.

"We all live happily because we are prepared to believe a network of lies and conflicting half truths. We couldn't bear to be without them."

All this is necessary, of course, to produce the "good things in life." It is a curiosity of the times that in this decade the philosophy of maximum production is being questioned, not by the working class, but by the young middle class. The pity is that they are often concerned about the effect on the environment — instead of the effect on the minds and bodies of the working class behind the mass production.

Life beside the conveyor belt

The Movie Palaces Are Gone Forever

By PAUL RICHARD

Going to the movies now is not the trip it used to be.

Once upon a time, when the silver screens were tiny and the movie palaces enormous, when even at the matinees thousands waited patiently behind purple velvet ropes, and all the usherettes were liveried and lovely, and the chandeliers dimmed slowly and then the curtains parted and suddenly the spotlight picked out Jesse Crawford at the mightly Wurlitzer — going to the movies then was to leave the real world.

Visitors from every age and every myth accompanied the journey. There upon the walls and on the painted curtains and carved upon the ceilings and the fountains in the lounges were Aztecs and Egyptians and knights in shining armor, and laborers in hard hats, and unicorns and airplanes, muses, saints and Indians—nothing secular or pagan had been banished or excluded.

Nowhere were the decorations more awesomely fantastic than in Hollywood itself. And the most extragantly opulent of the many theatres of southern California were the product of one man.

His name is Anthony B. Heinsbergen. Starting in the 1920s, in the days of silent films, he designed the decorations for 747 theatres, some in Mexico City, some as far north as Alaska, most of them now gone.

"Movie Palace Modern," an intimate exhibition of A. B. Heinsbergen's designs, now is on display at the Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C.

"Movie Palace Modern" is as good a name as any — though "La Brea Modern" is his own and "Aztec Airways" is another—for the style that he mastered. He did not invent it. No one person did.

It was endlessly eclectic, and as it blossomed all at once, in New York and California, St. Louis and Chicago, it drew from countless sources, from the pyramids of Egypt to the painted ceilings of the Renaissance, from medieval manusoripts, from Italian futurism, from the high baroque, from the fantasies of the popular mind, from anywhere at all.

A. B. Heinsbergen was born in Holland 73 years ago. He loved the Spanish renaissance, and though he struggled to make his work thoroughly modernistic, he never shunned the past.

Hal Glicksman, the Corcoran's former assistant director who organized this show, describes Heinsbergen's early work as "a lovely mishmash of the Renaissance and the baroque." It galloped toward the modern only after 1925. That year the artist went to Paris and saw the famous exhibition of decorative arts that gave us Art Deco.

Heinsbergen, says Glicksman, devoured he new style. "He photographed it, took movies, and . . . back in Los Angeles he showed his film to Charles Kouras of Fox Theatres who immediately said, 'Do the next one that way.' The finished theatre, modified by Heinsbergen's muted color schemes and renaissance sensibilities, was unrecognizable to Skouras who had to see the Paris film again to be convinced the theatre was really modernistic."

Art Deco meant streamlining, with lots of glass und chrome and black. Heinsbergen's Fox-Wilshire Theatre, which opened in 1928, was Art Deco all right, but it was other things as well.

The furniture was Bauhaus-decadent with traces of Roman columns, but some motifs were Egyptian and the stage wore a spiked tiara. Though the machine age color scheme was suitably black and silver the trim was coral red. Loony as it sounds, Heinsbergen was so good that everything somehow fits.

The age of flight had dawned as well, and Heinsbergen's Pantages Hollywood Theatre, which opened the same year, was devoted to the sky.

To look up at the ceiling was to find oneself in space. You were peering at the tops of clouds, planes, balloons and parachutes, toward the earth beyond. The walls were a profusion of suns and stars and comets.

A Grecian statue holds an airplane in her hand. A chariot with wings flew above the stage against a sky of black. The speakers were behind it. The black sky was a void to let the sound come out.

To watch a '20s movie flickering on the tube is to lose the flavor of how one saw them then.

Those movie palaces were real theatres with at least three curtains and enormous stages with dressing rooms and wings. Huge orchestras accompanied the last of the silent films, and when the movie ended, the orchestra ascended, majestically on elevators, and the vaudeville began.

It was escape stuff, surely, and all that opulence increased as the depression worsened. The movies of the '30s frequently began with titles seen against shimmering white satin. In those domestic comedies the wives hung out in penthouses, the husbands wore tuxedos.

But the desire to escape, Hal Glicksman feels, is not the only cause of the rapid spread across the U.S. of Movie Palace Modern.

Pantages, Skouras, the other movie moguls, were brash immigrants who loved competing with one another for class as well as cash.

"In new movie theatres now," says Glicksman, "they wrap the screen around you in a space that's antiseptic. The screens were smaller then. The audiences were not so electronic media-oriented. They also looked at walls."

"As an art historian, I'm less a scholar than a raider," says Glicksman. Part-time detective work nourished by curiosity and nostalgia, led him to Heinsbergen a few years ago.

"They were tearing down the Richfield Tower in L.A. a jewel of west coast Art Deco, all gold leaf and black tile and goodies of Egyptian blue — and I figured the guys who did the work might still be alive.

"So I looked up the old magazines and instead of studying the tests, copied down the ads, ads for decorative iron work, for lighting and design. The A. B. Heinsbergen Decorating Co. was still listed in the L.A. phone book, so I called them up."

It was there that Glicksman found the watercolor working drawings included in this show. A little more research led him to Mott Studios, whose photographs were taken when the theatres were brand new.

"I called it 'La Brea Modern'," Heinsbergen told Glicksman, "and prophesied that 20 years from then you wouldn't see one building in that style — and that's true, they've plastered them all over now. Now we look at it and wince a little bit — did we ever think that was good?"

Classic Tunes From Classics

By RON ROBINSON
CJVI Program Director

"Joy" by Apollo 100, an instrumental group featuring electric guitars, makes it to the No. 1 spot on the Scoreboard this week, straight from the immortal pen of Johann Sebastian Bach. Adapted from the familiar "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring," the contemporary disc is receiving great attention at record stores and radio stations across the continent. . . .

Another classical selection has become a Top 10 item in Edmonton. "Eine Kliene Nachtmusik (Mozart's 13th)" by Waldo de Los Rios has benefitted from remarkable play on the "rock" station in the Alberta city, and has been on the charts there for 11 weeks. . . .

Compare the Hits: In preparing the "Remember When" program for tomorrow I came across a tape containing some fascinating memorabilia for those of us who grew up in the 1940s. It was just 27 years ago this week that Lawrence Tibbett of the Metropolitan Opera was the star of the Hit Parade broadcast, singing the No. 1 song, "Don't Fence Me In." Other selctions from that same week include "The Trolley Song," "Accentuate the Positive," "Dance with a Dolly" and the Irving Berlin waltz, "Always." To hear how musical tastes have changed catch the highlights from that Hit Parade broadcast tomorrow at 5:05 p.m. on CJVI. . . .

The rock opera album "Jesus Christ, Superstar" has become an enormous hit in most English-speaking areas of the world, with the ironic exception of the country where it was recorded Great Britain. In fact the 2-LP Decca set has sold more than 5½ million copies worldwide to become the most successful British-made album in history, surpassing the previous record holder, "Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band", by the Beatles. Interestingly "Superstar" is only now starting to sell well in Britain. . . .

Victoria Fair: What Now?

By AUDREY JOHNSON

News of the cancellation of Victoria Fair for 1972 will be regretted by a large number of people.

They will range from those who found interesting and remunerative employment in it, to the theatre and music buff for whom it provided summer solace.

And it will definitely include those of us who have for long stubbornly held to the belief that Victoria is a natural and ideal setting for a summer festival of the arts.

With all the physical attractions that bring visitors by the thousands, plus traditionally cool nights which favor indoor entertainment, and a lively and substantial fine arts community, why has this city failed to provide rooting for a sturdy festival?

Other cities with no more to offer, and in most cases considerably less, have succeeded.

Is it a case of niggardly financing or unsuitable formula and emphasis?

To be assured of basic box office revenue, it is of first importance to woo and win the home town audience as a stable support factor.

The cancellation statement by Victoria Fair directors includes a comment that the basic Victoria audience had been won and it now becomes necessary to attract audience from further afield.

This could well be the most realistic statement contained in the announcement for some of us have long had the measure of audience potential in this city and it would work out pretty close to a little better than 12,000 persons over a nine-week period.

But if it is accurately stated that Victoria Fair has progressed in three years from an $18,000 deficit to a break-even operation, then that fact coupled with the feat of having achieved total local audience saturation, makes it hard to understand the cancelling of the 1972 Fair.

The theatre-dedicated don't sordinarily give up the ship except under the most desperate conditions.

According to the directors the operation is being suspended, not because of any indication of grant funds being unavailable or less than previously, but because increased financial support is not at hand to meet the need for expansion and maintenance of the existing standard.

It is firmly denied that Dr. Ralph Allen's departure and the almost inevitable departure of stage designer Robert Cothran has any bearing on the matter.

Peter Garvie, Dean of the UVic fine arts department, is quoted as saying the expansion included plans for hiring more professional actors and launching "a massive publicity campaign" that would encompass the mainland and entire U.S. west coast.

And to such plans one can only say, "right on!"

But what was to be the lure?

Three lavishly mounted but esoteric theatre pieces and a chamber music season. Now quickly, before anyone brands me a philistine, let me say that there is nothing wrong with such a program per se.

Shakespeare's comparatively seldom performed Winter's Tale, the less-trammeled Shaw play, Heartbreak House and Wycherly's tangy Restoration comedy, The Country Wife, add up to an interesting repertory for genuine theatre buffs.

As former mayor Hugh Stephen would say upon occasion, you don't have to convert the converted.

But if Victoria Fair directors were reaching toward maximum audiences — not just the regular theatre goers but the uncommitteed, the fringe people, the vacationers seeking entertainment for their evening hours — then they were planning to fish in the right waters with the wrong gear.

I am sure many of these people might enjoy the experience once they were in the theatre, but getting them in — aye, there's the rub.

One of the major problems for Victoria Fair is its close tie-up with the University. From all practical standpoints the factors involved create something of a stalemate.

On the plus side the tie-up means the availability of resources difficult and costly to duplicate off campus. But on the minus side there is the inevitable academic flavor to the programming and the equally inevitable loss of continuity if, as has happened, the artistic director-department head decides to go elsewhere.

Who knows if a new theatre professor could or would want to cary on the Fair.

In other Canadian festivals their independent boards are free to replace a departing artistic director with probably up to a year's advance notice.

For my own part I am particularly sorry to think that the musical side of the Fair — which always seemed to be given a sort of step-sister relationship to the theatre program — is to be lost after the really excellent developments of last summer.

It does seem that at this point grant-making bodies and any other official groups and individuals with access to funds should take a long close look at Victoria Fair, and its asserted accomplishment.

A decision must be made quickly whether a prestige festival, such as this has set out to be, is what is good for this city. And if it is then action should be taken.

For if everything that has been claimed for Victoria Fair is sound and demonstrable, then the foothold it has gained in three years must not be allowed to slip, as slip it will if there is a gap of even one year.

In fact we will be back to square one when and if a fresh start is ever made.

A LIFE OF POVERTY means constant hard bargaining to Tevye (Richard Ouzounian) left, in Fiddler on the Roof. Perchik (Marek Norman) argues.

'Fiddler' Coming Next Week

Two of the longest-run musicals in Broadway history have a dominant folk flavor.

Oklahoma: concocted from an American folk play, held the record for a few years and now there is Fiddler on the Roof, of Russian lineage, still playing in both New York and London.

So far it has not been seen in Victoria but the gap is about to be mended by the UBC Musical Theatre Society which will present "Fiddler" at McPherson Playhouse next week, Wednesday through Saturday.

Based on the delightful short stories of Sholem Aleichem, the musical tells lyrically and with generous humor the tale of Tevye, his wife Golde and their five daughters.

Tevye, who has always had to endure poverty in their Russian village of Annatevka, now must learn to accept the modern ways of his daughters, and in the end the exile of all Jews from Russia.

Richard Ouzounian, a 21-year-old student in UBC's theatre department, plays Tevye and in the supporting cast are a number of people of Ukrainian and other Slavic origins.

Well-known mainland theatre man Jimmy Johnston heads a directing team that includes Karl Kobylansky as musical director and leader of the 25-piece orchestra, and choreographer Grace Macdonald.

Miss Macdonald, a show choreographer of many years' experience, has spent long hours in research to obtain an authentic flavor and the styles of Russian dance.

The Musical Theatre Society of UBC has been performing musicals for 56 years but first came to Victoria three years ago when it brought Hello Dolly to the McPherson Playhouse, achieving a resounding success.

Last year West Side Story was brought over and Ruth Nichol, the talented young actress who played Anita in that production, appears as Golde in Fiddler on the Roof.

Among a lot of memorable music in Fiddler the comic-pathetic If I Were a Wealthy Man and the lovely Sunrise, Sunset are highlights.

Tickets are available now at McPherson box office for 8 p.m. performances beginning Wednesday and a 2 p.m. matinee Saturday.

Local Play At Gallery

Greater Victoria Art Gallery is to host the production of a local author's play next month.

Following his successful presentation of Emily Carr: A Portrait, in December in connection with the gallery's Emily Carr Centennial exhibition, Allan Purdy is directing a production of Death Scene, a one-act play by Joan Mason Hurley.

Mrs. Hurley's play was second-prize winner in an Ottawa Little Theatre playwriting competition.

Production dates are Feb. 25 and 26.

In the cast are Anthony Jenkins, Carolyn Stephenson, Sheila Litt, John Drean and Evanne Murray.

The play will be supplemented by a reading from Dylan Thomas by Anthony Jenkins.

Sooke District Drama Festival

The third annual school drama festival organized by Sooke school district will take place this year during the week of Feb. 14-18.

Entries have been received so far from Glen Lake, Langford, Millstream; John Stubbs, Savory and Saseenos elementary schools; Dunsmuir and Elizabeth Fisher junior secondary and Belmont and Edward Milne senior secondaries.

Centres for the festival will be at Glen Lake, Millstream; Dunsmuir junior and Edward Milne senior secondaries.

Adjudicator will be Colin Gorrie, director of the Bastion Theatre School.

THE EMPRESS OF VICTORIA

CONCENTRATION is evident as Nanaimo skip Don MacRae (left) watches efforts of Gordon Howden and Gene Koster (right) to sweep rock into house during game in Vancouver Island seniors' curling championships. Watching intently in background are skip Jack Punshon and Jack Bowering (white sweater), members of Victoria rink that almost upset MacRae, who won national title in 1970. Can They Elude Cats After Rocky Escape?

"We got 'em out of the mountains," manager-coach Rudy Pilous reported on Brandon Wheat Kings, "Now we'll see if they can slip past the Cougars."

Cougars, Victoria's entry in the Western Canada Hockey League, appear to be the lesser of two evils after Pilous fretted for two days over the whereabouts of his Brandon team.

A train carrying the Wheat Kings was held up for two days in the Rocky Mountains by severe weather conditions and the threat of snowslides.

GAME POSTPONED

The Wheat Kings finally arrived in Vancouver late Friday night, but not before their scheduled game against Vancouver Nats was postponed.

"All I can say," said Pilous, "is that we have just established a North American and World hockey record ... five straight postponements!"

"But it looks like our 'streak' will end in Victoria."

Brandon's "record run" began last weekend when influenza and travel conditions forced the Wheaties to turn back from Flin Flon and force postponement of two weekend games with the Bombers.

Then a scheduled Tuesday game in Brandon against Calgary Centennials was set back because of Wednesday's all-star game in Vancouver.

PLAYERS RECOVER

Brandon's latest travel difficulties forced two more postponements — Thursday against New Westminster Bruins and Friday against the Nats. The schedule will be altered to allow Brandon to play in New Westminster on Sunday and in Vancouver on Monday.

Pilous said in Vancouver Friday that his flu-bitten players have all recovered except goaltender Dave McLelland.

Victoria coach Fred Hucul reported Cougars are "in the best condition in some time." A week's layoff has enabled defencemen George Pesut and Blake Robinson to recover from ankle injuries.

In addition, winger Jerry Dudar, sidelined for two weeks with a throat problem, has resumed skating and is expected to dress against his former team tonight.

Game time is 8:30.

Travel problems, compounded by the national-wide strike of air controllers, forced two other postponements Friday. Affected were Medicine Hat's visit to Edmonton and a Swift Current-Saskatoon game.

One game was played.

Calgary Centennials, backed by the goaltending of all-star John Davidson, grabbed an early 3-1 lead and field on to edge Winnipeg Jets 3-2 in the Manitoba capital.

The Jets out-shot Calgary 35-23 but couldn't dent Davidson's armor except on shots by Brian Dick and Gordie Cole. John Senkpiel, Danny Gare and Ron Homeniuke scored for the Western Division-leading Centennials.

Former WHL President Saw Expansion Danger

There's a story going the rounds that the National Hockey League is about to make a momentous announcement on or about all-star game time. And that's next week. But why wait? Here's a preview.

No, it isn't that the NHL will take over the World Hockey Association, although that idea is worth a thought. Think of it, another round of expansion, almost ready made, and the NHL would still have control. No that wouldn't work; besides it should have been done before — before that shotgun expansion of last fall, admitting Atlanta and Long Island into the league.

That was the sign that indicated the NHL was running scared of the WHA. It had often been stated that the next expansion wouldn't take place until 1973. Then, presto, the WHA took shape, and the NHL reacted. And now is about to react again.

How?

Ah yes, Bill MacFarland of the Western Hockey League has been quoted as stating that there is no way the WHL can survive under the present system. All the good players, if they aren't in the NHL, will soon be in the WHA, and there won't be any players left for the struggling minor divisons.

So his league is in danger of going under.

Now perhaps the NHL realizes this, and will take corrective action. Perhaps even the WHL will be declared "Major League." This might work, it might even help to spike the WHA in its bid for players, but whether or not it will provide WHL cities with a better colibre of hockey is a moot point.

Actually, this is what should have been done in the first place, or the second. It was several years ago that former WHL president Al Leader saw the expansion handwriting on the wall, and recognized the signs.

"Give us major league status," he suggested, "and if some of the smaller centres want to opt out, we could fill from AHL cities." That was the gist of Leader's plan at a time in which several of today's NHL players were starring in the minors. But if it was too simple then, it probably is too late now.

So, there must be another plan.

It could be that the draft system will be changed. Teams will be allowed to protect 12 players only. This would give the have-nots a chance. On second thought, that wouldn't work. The owners are too selfish. Besides, why should they give up what took years of hard work, and money, to accumulate? "Keep 'em down," is not only theory, it's a golden rule.

But there is yet another avenue that hasn't been explored; or perhaps it has. When Soviet premier Alexi Kosygin was in Vancouver last fall, it was the intention here to discuss hockey with him. But he declined. However, he did say, through an interpreter, that he had enjoyed his first NHL game, and that he thought it would be nice if Russia and Canada could get together and renew their hockey relations.

If this was Kosygin's good-neighbour policy, as one of the world's top left wingers, he at least had the authority to make it known. And he didn't specify that the competition had to be at an amateur level either.

Obviously, NHL president Clarence Campbell got to hear of the Soviet Premier's suggestion, and followed through.

Thus next week's announcement:

"The National Hockey League will go world wide, if not in the fall of 1972, in 1973. Initially, we plan to send over two NHL teams for a series of exhibition games. We want to know just what we are getting into ... then we plan to set up a home-and-away schedule featuring the best in Russia, Sweden, Czechoslovakia, Finland ... world class hockey."

"Imagine," he went on, "crowds of 22,000 in Prague, the game being boomed around the world on Eurovision; that first historic appearance of the Russian national team at home to the Montreal Canadiens in Moscow; the debut of the Swedish team in Minnesota — it defies the imagination the possibilities that exist."

"What about the draft," a listener interrupted. "Larry Regan has often said that only the top NHL teams could win consistently against the Russians, and Gerry Pinder has suggested the very same thing."

"I wished you hadn't asked," Campbell answered. "That's all that is holding up the deal."

"They won't allow us to draft — from them."

Damitall, Clarence, that's torn it, and it was such a great idea, too!

MacRae Rink Forced to Go An Extra End

A pair of former Canadian seniors curling champions both won first-round games Friday in the opening rounds of the Vancouver Island championships.

But it was a tight fit for Don MacRae, who skipped a Nanaimo rink to the 1970 national title.

MacRae, ahead 7-4 after five ends, had to go an extra end before gaining a 9-8 decision over Jack Punshon of Victoria Curling Club. Punshon sent the game into the extra end by counting a singe on the 10th after purposely blanking the ninth.

MacRae had to draw to the four-foot circle to ring up the winning point.

Gordie Moore, two-time B.C. Champion from the Victoria Club, had an easier time as he carved out an 11-6 victory over playland's Alex Alexander.

Another major threat, Nanaimo's Howie Christopherson also came through in easy fashion. A former provincial Legion champion, Christopherson rolled to an easy 9-2 win over Bert Booth of Victoria.

The 25-rink, double-knockout competition resumed this morning and will wind up Sunday at Victoria Club.

Two Island representatives — winners of the "A" and "B" events — will travel to the Pacific Coast Curling Association finals in Haney Feb. 4-6.

The coast champions will meet the B.C. Curling Association (Interior) representatives in a best-of-three playoff for the provincial crown early in February.

Gilles Admits Pay Better in Hockey

By Canadian Press

Gilles Villemure is finding it far more profitable to tend goal in the National Hockey League than to drive standardbred horses.

The 30-year-old Trois-Rivieres, Que., native, who drives and trains his own stable in the off-season, also finds it easier stopping pucks in the NHL, as he did 14 Friday night in a New York Ranger 5-0 win over California Golden Seals, than winning at the track.

The game at Oakland was the only one scheduled Friday night.

TOPS GOALIES

Villemure, emerging as the No. 1 Ranger backstop, tops the league netminders. He entered the week with the best goals-against average, 1.74, and lowered that mark in two starts, including a 5-1 win over Los Angeles Wednesday.

His shutout was the third of the season for the one-time minor pro standout who got his big chance in the New York organization last year when it was decided to give veteran Ed Giacomin a rest from the Iron Man performance he had been giving for four years.

With Villemure around for relief, the Ranger goaltending tandem took the Vezina Trophy, awarded to the goalies allowing the fewest goals during the season.

Giacomin's 2.15 averaged shaved .21 goals off his best previous mark, while Villemure turned in a respectable 2.29. However, with Giacomin's performance slipping this year, Villemure is finding any thoughts he may have entertained about driving the sulkies full-time slipping farther from his mind.

"The arrangement is perfect at the present time. I play hockey in the winter months and race in the summer. But I must say hockey pays more."

WANTS REGULAR WORK

His main ambition is to play regularly with the Rangers, an ambition he's starting to realize, and to race a horse under two minutes, a plateau he could reach in the near future since graduating from the country fair tracks to the big time at Montreal's Blue Bonnets and Saratoga, N.Y., where he has 15 horses in his string.

Goals by rookie Gene Carr and Bruce McGregor in the first period gave Villemure all the offence he needed against the Seals as the New Yorkers regained a share of first in the East with Boston, each with 77 points.

'Suicide Squad' Berth For Mighty Alan Page

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The National Football League's Most Valuable Player on the suicide squad?

When everyone's an all-star, that's the way it has to be, coach Dick Nolan of San Francisco said Friday. He's coaching the National Conference team against the American Conference in Sunday's 22nd annual Pro Bowl game in Memorial Coliseum.

When the game kicks off at 4:15 p.m., EST, nationally televised with Southern California blacked out, MVP Alan Page will be in on the kickoff team — the suicide squad.

The 6-foot-4, 250-pound Page, a defensive tackle from the Minnesota Vikings, doesn't mind the extra action.

Of the 80 Pro Bowlers, only two were selected because of their play on special teams; kick returners Leslie (Speedy) Duncan of Washington for the NFC and Eugene (Mercury) Morris of Miami for the AFC.

FLIPS COIN

McCafferty solved his problem of choosing a starting quarterback by flipping a coin. Miami's Bob Griese won, and he'll be joined on offense by wide receivers Paul Warfield of Miami and Fred Beletnikoff of Oakland.

Kansas City's 15-year veteran Len Dawson will play at least half the game and McCafferty said Dawson's outside receivers will be Otis Taylor of Kansas City and Gary Garrison of San Diego.

Nolan said Roger Staubach of Dallas and Greg Landry of Detroit will share quarterbacking chores, with Staubach starting.

Their targets include Ted Kwalick of San Francisco, Charlie Sanders of Detroit, Gene Washington of San Francisco, Bob Grim of Minnesota and Dick Gordon of Chicago.

Winners will receive $2,000 each, losers $1,500.

Austrian Skier Takes Cup Lead

ST. GERVAIS, France (AP) — Annemarie Proell of Austria won the second leg of the giant slalom today and took over first place in the World Cup ski standings.

Her time for today's run was one minute 38 seconds, giving her an over-all time for the two legs of three minutes 12.03 seconds. She won the first leg Friday.

Second place in the over-all event went to Monika Kaserer of Austria with an over-all time of 3:14.80. Her time today was 1:39.23. Marie Therese Nadig of Switzerland finished third with an over-all time of 3:16.13, clocking 1:38.30 today.

MACCHI SECOND

Miss Proell grabbed the World Cup lead from Francoise Macchi of France in the last major race before the Winter Olympics at Sapporo, Japan, next month. Miss Macchi fell during the first leg of the slalom Friday.

Miss Macchi finished second today in 1:39.03 but that was only good enough for a 16th place tie with an over-all time of 3:22.06. Michele Jacot of France, fifth-place finisher in the first heat, fell today.

Diane Pratte of Rouyn, Que., was the top Canadian finisher, placing 24th over-all in 3:25.24.

Victoria Rinks Click

COURTENAY — Lower Island rinks came up strong on the first day of Vancouver Island's distaff curling finals.

Flora Martin's Victoria Curling Club entry and Karen Kaese of Nanaimo reached the "A" final of the women's double-knockout playdowns with easy first-round victories Friday.

Kathy Taylor of the Racquet Club and Duncan's Bonnie Harper were first-round winners in girls' playdowns also being staged at the Comox Valley Curling Club.

Mrs. Martin, supported by Edna Messum, Elsie Humphrey and Doreen Baker, defeated clubmate Claire Duncan 13-5. The Nanaimo foursome, which also includes Shannon Blackburn, Loretta Ahlstrom and Jean Beaulac, beat Myra Perriman of Campbell River 12-8.

The four-rink playdowns resume today with the Island winner advancing to the Coast final at Vancouver, Jan. 28-30. The Coast champion, in turn, will move to the six-rink provincial final to be played in Dawson Creek Feb. 6-8.

Miss Taylor's rink, which includes Debbi Camp, Pam Taylor and Lori Skillings, defeated Penny Paul of Port Alberni 7-5 while the Duncan quartet, which includes Barbara James, Roselyn Hanna and Tracy Hepburn, carved out an easy 11-3 victory over Corrine Perryman of Campbell River.

The girls' Island champions move directly into the B.C. finals to be played at Williams Lake Feb. 18.

'HE THREATENED TO HIT ME OVER HEAD WITH RACQUET'

LONDON (AP) — Clark Graebner of New York won a stormy tennis match by default Friday over Romanian Ilie Nastase, who charged the American "threatened to hit me over the head with his racquet."

The match, marked by shouting and underlined by bitterness, was a men's singles semifinal of the Rothmans International Indoor Tournament at Royal Albert Hall, more often associated with boxing than tennis.

Cliff Richey, of Sarasota, Fla., defeated 37-year-old Australian Lew Hoad, 7-6, 6-4, to claim the second spot in the finale for the $7,500 first prize today.

Nastase, who lost the first set 6-3, walked off the court at the beginning of the second set as the crowd stood and booed.

The shouting match between the two players began with Graebner's complaints about the slowness of the ball girls but there evidently was still ill feeling from a stormy match between Nastase and Richey in Paris last November.

At one point Graebner jumped over the net, grabbed Nastase by the shirt and shouted, "You can't do to me what you did to Cliff Richey."

"This guy is famous for this sort of act," Graebner said later. "All the players know he does it. He was making disparaging remarks all the time."

"He threatened to hit me," Nastase told newsmen. "My hand was shaking. I couldn't play on."

Graebner, listening to Nastase talk to newsmen, denied he threatened to hit him.

With Graebner leading 3-2 in the first set, a ball girl got in Graebner's way as he went for a shot. The umpire ordered the point to be replayed and Nastase got angry. Graebner then leaped over the net.

When play resumed, Graebner kept shouting that the ball girls were incompetent and then got into a verbal exchange with the umpire before tournament referee Mike Gibson walked on to the court and shouted "Stop it!"

At the end of the set, Nastase shouted, "I can't play any more," and walked off.

Gibson said later he would report Nastase to the British Lawn Tennis Association. "He stopped it, and there is no ground for reporting Graebner," said Gibson. "But I am reporting Nastase for walking off."

George's 'Blah Day' Enough As Ice Chills Cross-Hander

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — George Archer said it was "just a blah day." Charles Owens said it was too cold. And Charles Coody said nothing at all—just packed his bags and left.

The streaking Archer, the hottest man on the pro tour at this early stage of the season, said he "was just kind of fumbling around out there," after posting a one-under-par 71.

But it was good enough for a one-stroke lead midway through the $150,000 Dean Martin-Tucson open golf tournament. The laconic Archer had a 36-hole total of 136 and sole control of the lead.

Owens, a tour sophomore, had a share of the top spot going into the second round. But the paratroop veteran who has a stiff left knee and a cross-handed grip, slipped to a fat 77, putting him far back in the field.

He was the first man off the tee in the chill desert dawn.

"It was 37 degrees with ice on the greens when I teed off," he said. "I'm from Florida. Just mention cold weather and it's all over for me. My hands were so cold I just didn't have any feeling in my hands."

And Coody, the Masters champion and World Series of Golf winner last year, inadvertently signed an incorrect scorecard and was disqualified. He signed for a four on the second hole when he actually scored five.

Archer, winner of the Glen Campbell-Los Angeles Open two weeks ago and a sixth-place finisher in last week's Crosby, led by a single stroke over a group of five players headed by Dave Hill, one of the men he beat in a playoff for the Los Angeles title.

Hill had a second round 69 for 137 and was tied at that figure with Bobby Nichols, Jack Montgomery and Bob Murphy, all with 70s, and rookie Bob Zender, who birdied his last two holes for a 68.

COOPER TEAM GETS CHANCE AFTER SUCCESSFUL APPEAL

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — A Victoria team raced against the clock today after getting a second chance Friday to qualify for Sunday's Motor Trend 500 automobile race here.

Owner Dick Midgley and driver Dave Cooper successfully appealed a Thursday decision that would have barred the Victoria car from its qualifying attempt.

Their 1971 Chevelle, built to 1971 standards, failed two inspections and was ruled out. Midgley appealed and a sympathetic technical committee gave the Canadian crew until noon today to make the necessary adjustments, pass inspection and make two qualifying laps.

Thirty of the 40 starting positions had been filled Friday and another 70 cars were still trying to qualify.

Under NASCAR rules, no work can be done on cars at night. Thus the Victoria crew had to wait until 7 this morning before going to work on the Vantreight-Daffodil Special. Changes had to be made on the car's roll-bar assembly and — the more difficult chore — to hinges on the trunk lid.

Midgley based his appeal on the fact the Canadians were never supplied with 1972 regulations. Their car was built and conformed to 1971 specifications.

Texan A. J. Foyt, driving a Chevrolet, still maintained the pole position. Richard Petty, in a Plymouth, and Mark Donahue, in a Matador, held down the next two spots.

Two Portland drivers — Hersch McGriff and Dick Brown — were successful qualifiers Friday along with defending champion Ray Elder.

Car Accident Didn't Prevent Belmont Ace From Contributing

PASS-CATCHING STAR with Calgary Stampeders, Canada's Grey Cup football champions, Herm Harrison will put hands to use in different way when he visits Memorial Arena next Monday. Harrison and other members of Stamps will face B.C. Lions in broomball game that will be one of highlights of annual Kinsmen "Schmockey Night" program. Two-hour show starts at 8 p.m. Tickets are priced at $1 each and are available at arena box office.

Influenza stopped Esquimalt's team but an automobile accident didn't deter Jim Kupiak from keeping his Victoria Senior High School Boys' Basketball League appointment Friday.

Kupiak suffered a head injury when the car he was riding, en route to the gym, was involved in an accident.

Playing with head bandaged and shaking off the effects of the mishap, Kupiak contributed 12 points to Belmont's cause as the Braves defeated Victoria High Totems 78-61 to move into a tie for second place with idle Oak Bay.

FLU STOPS 'EM

Esquimalt's scheduled game with Mt. Douglas was set back to Tuesday (4 p.m.) when flu depleated the Dockers' lineup.

In the only other league game played Friday, Leon Mitchell's 30-point effort sparked the leading Reynolds Roadrunners to a 76-59 victory over Mount View Hornets.

Elsewhere, Oak Bay and Claremont shared the exhibition spoils with visiting mainland teams.

Oak Bay recovered from a 23-21 half-time deficit to edge North Vancouver Norsemen 54-51, at Oak Bay while the Claremont Spartans dropped a 59-33 decision to West Vancouver Highlanders.

Oak Bay meets West Vancouver, while the Totems tackle the Norsemen in another exhibition round at Vic High tonight.

EDMONDS HOT

Clive Haas, John Hunter and Lee Edmondson backed Kupiak's gritty performance to spark Belmont to its fifth victory in six starts. Hunter and Haas also wound up with 12 points along with Kupiak.

Haas popped in 10 of his 12 points in a straight stetch when he came on the floor in the third quarter.

Edmondson was the game's standout. He scored a startling 100 per cent from the field and finished with 30 points to wind up as the game's high man.

Kevin Townsend topped Totems, who trailed 56-41 at the half, with 21 points.

Mount View, sparked by the efforts of Kevin Gilbert, Dennis Daviault and Bruce Lubinich, held the Runners to a 15-15 time after the opening quarter but Reynolds' strong, second-quarter spurt enabled them to pull ahead 37-21 at the half.

DRIPPY SKIES DISRUPT CITY SPORTS SCHEDULE

The heavy and steady rainfall of the past few days has forced postponement of most outdoor sports activity scheduled in Victoria this weekend.

All Vancouver Island Field Hockey Association games have been postponed along with the entire Lower Island Minor Soccer League schedule.

The Victoria Rugby Union called off all but one of its games scheduled today. The exception was a first division match between James Bay and Cowichan, which was expected to be played at Brentwood College.

A decision on Sunday's rugby schedule was to be made later today.

The District Soccer League also was affected. All weekend matches were called off except four scheduled on the water-shedding fields at Beacon Hill Park, off Douglas Street.

Two of the matches were to be played today and two are to start at 2:15 p.m. Sunday.

Belmont Girls Ease To Seventh Straight

Belmont continues to be the dominant power in the Victoria High School Senior Girls' Basketball League.

The league-leaders, tripped by Mt. Douglas in the season's opener, ran off their seventh straight victory Friday by trouncing Victoria High 24-8.

In another game, Reynolds handed Mount View its seventh straight setback 26-14. Reynolds collected eight points from Donna Redlin and six each from Rosemary Fuller, Diane Pendray and Lucy Gutowski.

Noni Chalmers scored seven points to lead Belmont, which got away to a 14-1 half-time lead to ease to its victory.

Clarke Rink Hits Stride In Schoolboy Playdowns

COURTENAY — Defending champion Brad Clarke of Mount View and three North Island rinks took the unbeaten road to move into the "A" semi-finals in the Vancouver Island schoolboys' curling playoffs.

The four all won two games Friday in the opening rounds of the double-knockout competition at the Comox Valley Curling Club.

Joining the Clarke rink in the "A" fours were Nanaimo's Rick Neff, Dave Hare of Courtenay's G. P. Vanier and John Pezel's Qualicum foursome.

Clarke is supported by Keith Pace, Jim Patterson and Mike Tennant. The Mount View rink opened with a 7-6 extra end victory over Oak Bay, skipped by Phil Brown, and then stopped Campbell River's Mike McKay 8-6.

SKILLINGS UPSET

Neff came up with the bit surprise of the day when he upset Steve Skillings' Mt. Douglas entry 10-2 in quarter-final play.

Skillings had won the Pacific Coast Curling Association's junior bonspiel during the Christmas holidays and had been considered a pre-tournament favorite here.

The Hare rink jumped on Victoria-area rivals to move into the semi-finals, defeated Kelly Gulton of Central Junior High, 9-7, then stopping Esquimalt's Kim Browning, also by a 9-7 count.

Qualicum shaded Paul Holland of Mt. Prevost 7-5 and then edged Geoff Outton of Victoria High 7-4.

The three-day event continued today and will wind up Sunday with the Island champion moving into the B.C. finals scheduled Feb. 24-25 at Kamloops.

Toronto Driver Picked Rookie-of-Year In U.S. Racing

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (AP) — Canadian drivers in United States Auto Club racing are as scarce as U.S. players in professional hockey, but a Canadian won special honors at the annual USAC awards dinner Friday night at Indianapolis.

George Eaton, 26, of Toronto, was named Rookie of the Year on the USAC championship circuit for Indianapolis-type cars.

Billy Vukovich of Fresno, Calif., whose father died trying to win his third straight Indianapolis 500 in 1955, was voted the most improved driver on the circuit. He finished third in the 1971 point standings against 32nd in 1970.

Last year's champions honored were Joe Leonard of San Jose, Calif., championship circuit; George Snider of Bakersfield, Calif., dirt-track championship; Butch Hartman of South Zanesville, Ohio, stock cars; Gary Bettenhausen of Tinley Park, Ill., sprint cars, and the late Danny Caruthers of Anaheim, Calif., midgets.

Eaton made his first championship start in the Tony Bettenhausen 200-miler at Milwaukee last Aug. 15. He was ninth there, and 10th in the Trenton 200 Oct. 3. He ran well in the Phoenix race Oct. 23 until he was eliminated by mechanical trouble.

Eaton campaigned last year in an Indy car used by the Parnelli Jones team the previous season. The car was owned by the Fejer Brothers team of Toronto, which this season plans to introduce its new Chinook Mark XII with Eaton at the wheel.

George Fejer said recently he and brother Rudy bought the Parnelli Jones car last year just "to see what George could do on the tracks."

"His performance is what made us decide to build a Chinook track car."

Take Your Boy to Arena And See Girls Play, Too

"Don't send, TAKE your boy to the arena, and stay to see him play."

That is the phrase that has been used for many years by the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association to remind parents of the importance of encouraging young players taking part in "Minor Hockey Week in Canada" festivities.

This year's "hockey week" starts Sunday across the country and the phrase won't be entirely appropriate by the time presentations by the four organizations in the Victoria arena have been concluded.

The reason?

Girls have earned a place on the program at the Racquet Club of Victoria, which has 224 youngsters involved in its minor hockey program.

ICE-TIME SHORTAGE

"We haven't included the girls in previous years, but they are active in the game and want to be part of hockey," explained Norm Goodfellow, past-president of the Racquet Club minor hockey organization.

When the club stages its annual "night" next Saturday with a series of 20-minute games running from 1 p.m until 11 p.m., bantam girls (aged 13 and 14) will be matched against one of several other distaff teams on the Island.

Girls won't make the scene with Saanich, Victoria and Esquimalt associations present their Minor Hockey Week shows, but it's shortage of ice-time, not lack of interest, that is keeping them among the spectators.

SAANICH IS FIRST

Saanich, with about 700 players in the fold, will launch local "hockey week" activities Sunday at George Pearkes Arena, where opening ceremonies are scheduled at 7 p.m. and brief games will be played from 4 p.m. until almost midnight.

Victoria's hockey youngsters get their time in the spotlight at Memorial Arena on Thursday, starting at 4 p.m., with the official opening at 8.

Esquimalt Minor Hockey Association has selected the same day as the Racquet Club, staging its "night" next Saturday at Esquimalt Sports Centre, slating games from 4 to 11 p.m., with opening ceremonies at 7:30.

MANY WANT TO PLAY

"There are lots of girls wanting to play, but there is must not enough ice time," said Charlie Leonard, president of the Victoria Minor Hockey Association, which will have 635 young players on display Thursday. "There are also many boys who want to play but can't because we are so short of ice time."

Annual hockey "nights" provide a way for each association to demonstrate what is being accomplished.

"It is to show parents why coaches and managers are getting up at 5 a.m., and it is a time for them to appreciate what the kids are doing," said Leonard.

Among the more than 2,000 youngsters playing in the Victoria area, competition gets fiercer and faster as the players grow older. However, most hockey people agree that the six and seven-year-old pups provide the most fun for spectators.

"Everybody gets a bang out of the little kids, whether they have youngsters playing or not," commented Dick Stratton, chairman of the Victoria night.

It might also be added that it is a big thrill for the youngsters to be playing in front of large crowds during their big event of the season.

Attending one or more of the "nights" is a best way to show the boys, and girls, that their efforts are appreciated.

BOWLER OF WEEK

Returning to list of winners in Times Bowler-of-the-Week competition is Wally Ostafychuk, who topped men's tenpin division during 13th week of ninth annual contest. "Wally O" rolled 227-184-214—625 series in Sunday Men's League at Mayfair Lanes to earn weekly award that qualifies him for Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs in April.

Distaff Jockeys Get One Foot in Stirrup

LONDON (CP) — They're off!

For the first time in the 200-year-old history of horse racing, women jockeys have been given the all-clear to compete.

The decision by the Jockey Club, British racing authority, comes after an 18-month legal struggle by two horse-riding women who took the club to court and established women's rights to train and race competitively.

"Fory ears we have been discriminated against on the grounds of sex," says Florence Nagle, who trains horses near Goodwood, Sussex. "Now the way is open for promising young riders."

WANT TO SHOW SKILL

Housewife Judy Goodhew, 30, who also led the campaign, says: "The news has delighted hundreds of point-to-point women riders who up until now have been restricted in the sport. Many girls are dying to get out onto the race tracks to show what they're made of. Given the right horse, a good girl jockey could beat Stan Mellor or Lester Piggott."

Not that the women will get a chance to pit their wits against these formidable veterans to racing, at least for the immediate future.

The Jockey Club has introduced strict rules on women jockeys. Although the women now have a foot in the stirrup —they are first due to race early next season—it may be years before they will be permitted to saddle up for any race they please.

WON'T RACE MEN

They will not be allowed to compete against men in 1972 and women's racing is to be restricted to the flat. The main argument against steeplechasing and hurdling is one of safety, the club says.

Women must apply for licences before being eligible to race. Licences will be restricted to those riders with amateur status.

"We're looking for competent point-to-point amateur riders," says Sir Randle Feilden, a senior Jockey Club steward.

Also under consideration are limitations on distances and weights.

SIX RACES SLATED

"Whatever is decided will be the standards which ensure that the women are not likely to be a danger to themselves or to the other ladies in the race," says Anthony Fairbairn, director of the Racing Information Bureau.

Sir Randle adds that six all-women races will be staged in 1972.

"We want to see what sort of public demand there is. It may boost course attendances although we have started on a limited basis in case the whole scheme turns out to be nothing more than a novelty."

As yet, only the principle of women's horse racing has been accepted. Fairbairn agrees that "there is still a lot to be done before women first come under starter's orders."

Norsemen End Slide: Butlers Take Second

Goals by Paul Bion and Mike Leonard broke a 2-2 deadlock Friday and carried Butler Brothers to a 4-2 victory over CFB Buccaneers and into second place in the Vancouver Island Hockey League.

In a second game played Friday at the Sports Centre, University of Victoria Norsemen tripped last-place London Boxing Club 5-1.

Butlers, who crept to within one point of the leading Victoria Cubs, dominated the game but were consistently stymied by the brilliant netminding of Joe Rozon until Bion and Leonard broke through for their burst early in the third period.

Butlers out-shot the third-place Bucs 36-15.

Leonard also scored Butlers' first goal while Terry Foreman counted the other. Pete Okopski and Gary Lauder were CFB scorers.

George Biggs scored a pair of goals to help Norsemen break a three-game losing streak. Dennis Thompson, Darryl DeWynter and Bill Nesbitt counted UVic's other goals while Tom Fowler wrecked Greg Larsen's shutout hopes by scoring Boxers' only goal early in the second period.

THE BRITISH COLUMBIA AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE POOL

A PROPOSAL FROM WESTCO INSURANCE COMPANY TO THE BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT TO LOWER RATES STILL FURTHER

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE COSTS TOO MUCH

Authorities, government leaders, politicians, experts in the insurance field, and now the British Columbia Automobile Insurance Board, agree that the price of automobile insurance in British Columbia is too high.

Apparently everyone agrees except that segment of the insurance industry in British Columbia which is controlled by the Eastern-based insurance industry.

Westco Insurance Company, the British Columbia company with its head office in Vancouver, has consistently maintained that B.C. automobile insurance rates are too high. Westco Insurance Company was founded to offer lower rates to good drivers. And believe it or not, that is the majority of drivers. Westco is the only company which has stated it will not increase rates in 1972.

If you have never had a serious automobile accident, why is your current insurance premium so high and predicted to go still higher? Because present insurance law makes it possible for the Eastern-based insurance industry to force good drivers to subsidize bad drivers. This means that no matter if you have been driving for five years or twenty five years and have never had a serious accident, your record is averaged with drivers who have already wrecked two or three automobiles. Your premium is based on a rate which is the average of total driver experience. Most people are good drivers and deserve lower rates. But the insurance industry requires that you subsidize the 10% to 20% of bad drivers who cause the majority of accidents. The insurance industry insists that you pay part of the cost for keeping these poor or marginal drivers on the road.

THE BRITISH COLUMBIA AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE POOL COULD CHANGE ALL THAT

Westco Insurance has proposed to the Government of British Columbia, a pooling arrangement which would set up a two-rate structure. One rate for good drivers who have earned it, a second, or "pool" rate which would apply to poor or marginal drivers.

Two benefits would result from such a progressive step:

1. The insurance rate for good drivers would automatically be reduced.
2. Because there would be no selling, as such, required for any driver placed in the Pool, there would be no salesmen or agent's commissions involved in this marginal type of business. Therefore this poorer type of driver could also benefit from lower overhead on his rates.

HOW WOULD THE BRITISH COLUMBIA INSURANCE POOL (BCAIP) BE ORGANIZED?

1. All insurance companies and agencies, the Motor Vehicle Departments, and the Office of the Superintendant of Insurance or any other designated office would have BCAIP application forms. When an applicant for automobile insurance was found to be unacceptable to any company on the basis of risk, he would merely fill in one of these forms and send it, or deliver it to the BCAIP office with a certified cheque, money order or cash payment in the amount of $75.00. This would effect immediate coverage. When the Motor Vehicle Report (driving record of the applicant) had been obtained the proper minimum rate would then be applied.
2. The BCAIP office, upon receipt of the application and the minimum partial payment of $75.00, would immediately assign a policy number, issue a pink liability card and a policy booklet. The applicant would be instantly and irrevocably bound for coverage.

HOW WOULD CLAIMS BE HANDLED?

The BCAIP would have its own claims department, functioning just as the claims department of any insurance company should function. The BCAIP insured who has had an accident would immediately notify any claims to the BCAIP and they would be processed promptly.

WOULD THIS PUT THE GOVERNMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA INTO THE INSURANCE BUSINESS?

Yes! But only in terms of marginal or poor business which the private automobile insurance companies have already indicated they do not want and which they refuse to write.

At present such unacceptable insurance business is placed in the "Insurance Exchange" which is the name given by the Eastern-based insurance industry to their own new private version for B.C. only of the inequitable and unworkable Assigned Risk Plan. Companies who implied they welcomed the "Insurance Exchange" were quickly found to be both refusing to accept risks and also refusing their agents permission to be recorded as the company refusing risks. The result is that these applicants are still being shuffled around from office to office, seeking compulsory coverage.

The BCAIP will solve this problem, once and for all — and with no capital outlay.

WHAT ARE THE BENEFITS OF BCAIP?

1. The immediate coverage of poor and marginal drivers who are at present regarded as unacceptable risks.
2. Lower rates for good drivers.
3. Lower overhead on the rates for Pool drivers than under any other system.
4. Employment for British Columbians. It is estimated that the establishment of the BCAIP would create at least 200 jobs in British Columbia in direct employment alone. The equivalents of these jobs are currently held in Montreal and Toronto.
5. All of the supplies of the present Facility, including printed documents, emanate from Montreal. The BCAIP would utilize British Columbia materials, British Columbia printers and British Columbia products as far as economically possible.

If you agree that automobile rates are too high . . .

If you agree that the British Columbia automobile insurance industry should be controlled in British Columbia, for the benefit of the people of British Columbia, and not from outside the province . . .

You can do something about it.

Urge the government of the Province of British Columbia to form the British Columbia Automobile Insurance Pool.

Contact your local M.L.A., or complete and mail this coupon to Westco Insurance Company. Westco will use all coupon returns in support of its presentation to lower Automobile Insurance rates in British Columbia.

Signed: Brian Rudkin
President
Westco Insurance Company

I urge the Government of British Columbia to consider and implement with the least possible delay a British Columbia Automobile Insurance Pool controlled in British Columbia to enable all drivers to obtain automobile insurance coverage at lowest possible cost.

PROBLEM

BLACK: 10

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

Master chess players come in all sizes and shapes, in varying ages and widely varying temperaments. Some are so unflappable that they don't seem to care whether they win or lose. Others wear their emotions on their sleeves.

In that last category is Borislav Ivkov, a 38-year-old Yugoslav who won the World Junior Championship in 1953 and became a Grandmaster two years later. He has played three times in the Interzonals and has won five international tournaments.

But, like every other chess player, Ivkov is not infallible. In last year's IBM tournament in Amsterdam, he overlooked a winning combination in the ending. When it was pointed out to him later, he was furious.

Footnote: I once saw Ivkov see red. This happened at the interzonal in Palma de Mallorca, 1970. He was playing Sammy Reshevsky and at the 73rd move claimed a draw, asserting the position had occurred three times. Ivkov, after having been proven wrong, resigned on the 83rd move, threw the pieces on the floor and stalked out of the hall furiously.

Beaverbrook Book Coming

By CY FOX

LONDON (CP) After years of research and writing, a vast new volume about Canadian-born Lord Beaverbrook is finally due for publication this year and should be a highlight of the book season.

The book, by historian A. J. P. Taylor, will run to about 700 pages and has been in the making since shortly after Beaverbrook's death in 1964.

It will give a detailed account of the late publisher's early years in the Maritime provinces and Montreal, when as a high-pressure financial organizer he began amassing the fortune he later used to develop a mass-circulation newspaper empire in Britain.

Taylor, a 65-year-old author of books on such subjects as 19th-century European history and the origins of the Second World War, was an admirer of Beaverbrook during the publisher's lifetime and remains equally sympathetic in his subject now that the big book with its 25 pages of illustrations is finished.

But he has shown considerable scholarly detachment in evaluating Beaverbrook's own account of his early years in Canada.

RESEMBLED BISMARCK

And he has brought to bear on the free-wheeling, controversial publisher the same techniques of character analysis as were used in a Taylor biography of Bismarck some years ago.

Taylor says Beaverbrook — born William Maxwell Aitken at Maple, Ont., in 1879 — resembled the legendary chancellor of the 19th-century German empire in having an extremely nervous temperament concealed behind a flamboyant public front.

The historian concedes that "the Beaver" may at times have been overbearing, mischievous and irresponsible in the career he pursued as journalistic impresario and political king-maker.

But Taylor denies any suggestion that Beaverbrook was an evil man.

Conceding that the publisher's campaign for Empire free trade before the Second World War was wrong-headed, the historian argues that other causes backed by the Beaver were worthy and wise, including his Keynes-style call for big spending as a cure for the Depression of the 1930s.

The biography, to be called Beaverbrook, will be published in July by Hamish Hamilton of London. This is one of the companies owned by another Canadian-born newspaper magnate, Lord Thomson of Fleet.

Of special interest to Canadians will be Taylor's analysis of Beaverbrook's role in the business boom which shaped Canada during the first decade of the 20th century.

In recent years Alan Taylor has turned from academic work at Oxford University and frequent television appearances to writing regularly for such Beaverbrook papers as The Sunday Express.

He also has been honorary director of the Beaverbrook library, a rich repository of archives which include the publisher's own life documents and much material about the late prime minister David Lloyd George.

But Taylor says his book is not an authorized or a commissioned biography.

For its part, Hamish Hamilton says Taylor has modelled himself on Beaverbrook's belief that a biography should print all the good and all the bad about its subject.

"The result is surely definitive," the publishing company insists.

400 Officials Out

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (Reuter) — Four hundred officials have resigned or been dismissed from their posts in the Communist party, government and parliament in Croatia in the last six weeks, it was disclosed here. The resignations and dismissals followed President Tito's sharp criticism early last month of the growth of nationalism and separatism in Croatia.

Outdoor-Indoor Living Designed for B.C. Climate

jack beastall

When a patio, or outdoor living room is included in the plans to modernize a garden layout, our first step is to look around for illustrations and ideas.

These are not too difficult to locate. In the library and book stores are volumes devoted entirely to this subject.

Pamphlets can be picked up at builder's supplies outlets which show how a manufactured product is used to advantage in construction.

The one drawback to our present sources of information is that none depict a really suitable design for the west coast of Canada.

Most of the books are written and produced in California, that is, in southern California where the climate throughout the year is vastly different to the climate of coastal British Columbia.

The same basic designs, modified to suit a specific building product, are found on the free pamphlets.

Some day we may develop a Canadian Pacific Coast outdoor living room, but in the meantime we must use our common sense and imagination to design a functional layout suited to year round local conditions.

It is a fairly simple matter to design an outdoor area suited to late spring, summer, and early fall, but doing this during the summer months when the need is greatest we find it extremely difficult to visualize the same area in winter. However, if we plan it in winter when snowflakes are drifting by the window, or a gale is driving horizontal slashes of rain across the landscape, we shall at least design a more functional structure for this latitude.

A roofed-in area is the answer, but the roof must be designed to shed water, and the general construction must be heavy enough to support that roof during periods of snow. At this point it is well to recall the 36 inches of snow which covered most roofs in 1968 and caused the collapse of what we considered substantially constructed buildings.

As soon as a roof is designed to shed water we need gutters, downspouts, and drain tiles to dispose of that water otherwise we may create conditions that are damaging to our garden plantings.

When we look at the amount of free water on the soil at this time of year, and think back to heavy rains that are part of a coastal fall, we realize that a solid floor is needed to shed water readily. In other words, we must use a floor with sufficient slope to prevent water from gathering in pools on the surface.

Floor construction has been greatly simplified since prefabricated concrete blocks have become readily available.

All that is necessary is to grade the soil to the required slope, cover with black plastic, spread two inches of sand on top, then lay the blocks with a small space between.

Traffic over the floor during construction of the walls and ceiling will settle the blocks. Some may need lifting or lowering to make the floor level.

Once this is done, dry topping-mix is poured into the spaces and the whole floor soaked with a hose or a sprinkler. The cement will soak up water and set without further labor.

The next consideration is the walls of our outdoor living room. Here we have to consider angle of sun at different periods of the year and the amount of heat likely to be trapped within the structure on hot summer days.

While the winter storage area will have reasonably solid walls, no wall should be sheathed from floor to ceiling. A space of at least 12 inches should be left at floor level and roof level to allow a free circulation of air and the escape of hot summer air.

The angle of the sun during summer determines the height of the walls. Too many patios have no shade from the summer sun during the hottest part of the day therefore do not serve the purpose for which they were intended. Designing for sufficient areas of shade, but not excluding all sunlight, is one secret of a functional outdoor living room.

No matter how high the temperature soars during summer there is always a chill in the air in coastal districts at sundown. This fact makes it worth while to consider the inclusion of a simple outdoor fireplace which could also be used as a barbecue.

Greater use of the outdoor living room will result when provision is made for the preparing of meals. Nothing quite equals starting the day with coffee, toast and bacon enjoyed outdoors in the early morning sun. It is one of the things we look forward to when on a camping trip.

With a suitable built-in bench (possibly around the fireplace-barbecue), cupboards beneath for utensils, and a fused, electrical circuit (adequate but not elaborate) it is a simple matter to plug in the toaster, frypan, and percolator, light a small fire in the fireplace, and really start to enjoy life.

Suitable lighting for use on summer and fall evenings is important. It provides pleasant outdoor living often not indulged in because of the trouble and inconvenience of running extension cords from the house.

The built-in bench and cupboards, if carefully designed, will double as an outdoor garden shelter for repotting house plants, servicing tub plants with annuals in spring and bulbs and heathers in fall.

This is work for which the average garden has no facilities.

Attached to the outside of one wall and concealed by suitable shrubs, we can build a lean-to garden shed for tools and lawnmower, thus making one structure serve more than one purpose. This is worth consideration in a one-lot garden.

A variation on this idea is to use the lean-to for winter storage of patio furniture, children's outdoor patio games, and other paraphernalia associated with outdoor living. In this case, entrance would be through a door in the wall provided with a suitable lock.

Readers have requested a plan for their outdoor living room. No one plan, or a series of plans, would suit every condition. Each gardener must develop a plan which suits the garden layout, the activities that are contemplated, the age groups that will use the structure.

The best we can do is to offer suggestions based on the shortcomings of outdoor living rooms already constructed in this area, living rooms designed for a different climate and a different way of life.

Incorporating the suggestions should enable you to plan and build a functional Canadian west coast outdoor living room that all the family will be eager to use.

WEEK'S WORK

To attract birds to a small garden, plant shrubs to make safe thicket for nesting and shelter. Use some native shrubs, adding berrying trees, flowers for hummingbirds, and seeding plants for seed eaters in fall.

Flowering annuals which take three months to reach budding stage must be sown now if you wish to raise your own plants. Sow in heated greenhouse or well lighted sunroom: lobelia; trailing for tubs and baskets, bush for beds and tubs; snapdragons, try the open faced butterfly type; verbena, which will only flower here if sown early and grow well into sturdy plants.

Seeds of tuberous begonias and gloxinias are sown indoors now to flower this summer. Need temperature between 60 and 70 deg. F. to grow in early stages.

Water all indoor plants sparingly during dull weather.

Border chrysanthemums in coldframe will have a few cuttings available now for rooting. Only do this if space can be given for growing on until April.

Draft-Dodgers Still Stream Into Canada

TORONTO (CP) — Thousands of United States youths have fled to Canada in recent years to escape the military draft and what many call the horrors of an unjust war in Vietnam.

Some, already inducted into the army but fearing for their lives should they be posted to Southeast Asia, have deserted and joined the draft-dodgers streaming into Canada. Unofficial estimates place more than 100,000 Americans now in Canada, with the number increasing weekly as the war drags on.

But offsetting the tide, at least in part, is a small trickle of Canadians crossing the border to join the U.S. armed forces with the specific aim of seeing the world at best or fighting in Vietnam, at worst.

They come from a variety of backgrounds, sparked by a variety of motives.

Some see it as their mission, others want a chance to travel while others just need a job with a challenge. Others, sons of Second World War veterans, feel they are continuing their heritage by fighting in Vietnam.

CHANCE FOR TRAVEL

In recent interviews, five Canadians explained why they joined the U.S. armed forces:

S. Sgt. Dennis Brown: 19 and a clerk with the federal finance department in Ottawa when he decided to join.

"I figured I would travel more with the U.S. Army than the Canadian. It was more of a novelty then . . . there were five of us from the same block who volunteered together at Lockport (N.Y.)."

Now a 29-year-old recruiting officer in Niagara Falls, N.Y., he said that as an army employee he feels he can't discuss U.S. policy on the war.

He served in Vietnam as a sergeant from September, 1966, for one year.

—Paul Jolicoeur, 23, Toronto: "I have always felt that even as a Canadian the case of communism versus democracy is something that transcends political boundaries.

"I feel that as a Canadian I have a tremendous stake in the power struggle in the world. And I feel if we lose it, if the free world does, Canadians certainly will suffer, even though at the moment we have a neutral position as a nation."

He joined the Marine Corps in October, 1965, and fought in Vietnam in search-and-destroy missions from May, 1966 to April, 1967. Three years later, Mr. Jolicoeur re-enlisted for another term with the Marines.

CHANGED MIND

—John Leavey, 26, Toronto: "Maybe I was even in love with John Wayne," he says. He joined the U.S. Air Force eight years ago to escape from school and for a chance to travel. He applied for overseas duty in 1966 because he wanted to go to England or Europe. He thought it might be a cheap way for his Canadian wife to travel, "so I put in for it." Instead, he ended up in Vietnam flying rescue missions from June, 1966 to October, 1967.

"From the time I went there until somewhere late in 1969 or early 1970 I thought the war was justified."

He now says "I'm against the war right across the board . . . because it's useless, bloody stupid, useless."

—Sgt. Michael Fleming, 21, Renfrew, Ont.: He was lured to the army by a thirst for adventure and a lack of inspiration with school. He also thought the U.S. was right in fighting in Vietnam and that the government was being unjustly criticized by the press and peace groups.

—William Burgess, 41, Aurora, Ont.: The U.S. acted properly "in coming to the aid of the South Vietnamese."

"I think it's still justified. I don't think there is any question about it. But I think the American people are too concerned with their own comforts, to carry out their responsibilities to their brothers in the world."

Born in Toronto, Mr. Burgess served with the U.S. Air Force from July, 1963 to May, 1971 in Vietnam.

Buckling seat and shoulder belts is an idea you can live with.

Before you buy any little car you should look into the little car that does everything well.

Chevy's little Vega.

It's hard to be modest about our little Vega, and now we're going to let you see why.

Under Vega's very stylish shell is a lot of little car. Perhaps more car than we really had to build.

But that's the way we are and a lot of people are glad of it.

Now, let's start at the beginning.

Vega's engine looks a whole lot like any other little car engine. But it acts somewhat differently. It forges confidently ahead, even on fast-moving freeways and up long steep hills. It eats miles instead of gas.

With Vega's wide wheels and pugnacious stance, traction and handling are firm and positive.

So is the braking, with big ten-inch discs up front, standard.

Before we get right inside, pause at the doors. See that piece of corrugated steel? It's called a side-guard door beam and it's extra protection we hope you'll never need.

And though you can't tell by looking, there are two roofs on the Vega. For stronger construction and extra quiet inside.

Notice the seats. Ah, those seats. Carved out of foam and just as comfortable after a full day's driving as they are after a trip across town.

Vega also has power ventilation, so air keeps moving through the car even when its standing still.

Another thing, Vega has an electric fuel pump, hidden in the gas tank, that automatically shuts off to protect your engine should your oil pressure ever drop too low.

Now, you're not going to rush out and buy a Vega just because it has power ventilation. Or an electric fuel pump. Or even because there are over 6000 Chevy dealers across Canada and the U.S.A., (so you're never far from service even though you'll rarely need it).

But there's a very good chance you'd buy a Vega if you got to drive one.

Because, while you can't see all of Vega's advantages, you can certainly feel them.

Stanfield Fascinated by Job, But Feels Sacrifices

By STEWART MacLEOD

OTTAWA (CP) — Robert Stanfield in four years as Opposition leader has pronounced his views on practically everything from taxes to Tibet.

But how did he really feel about being called "Big Thunder," the less-than-flattering title bestowed on him by some Liberal MPs to mock that extremely low-key Stanfield oratorical approach?

The question caused him to throw back his head and laugh, and it wasn't just a polite little giggle.

"No, opinions like that don't bother me at all," he said, still smiling, "it's rather funny."

Turning serious, the 57-year-old Progressive Conservative party leader added that it bothers him much more to read things that are inaccurate simply through lack of research.

"When I see conclusions being reached through sheer laziness, it bothers me a lot."

The purpose of the interview was more concerned with whether Mr. Stanfield enjoys his work, whether he was sorry he ever left Nova Scotia, how he gets along personally with Prime Minister Trudeau, or whether he minds having former leader John Diefenbaker looming largely a few seats away from him in the Commons.

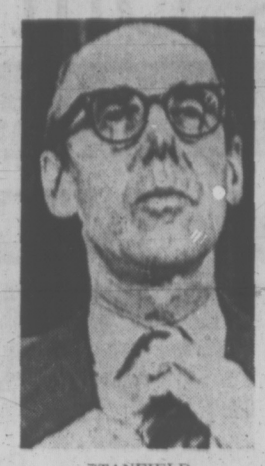
DRASTIC CHANGE

There is no doubt that after four years in Ottawa, life has changed drastically for the non-dynamic Mr. Stanfield who use to walk leisurely to his Halifax office and look forward to frequent evenings with favorite books. He now can't recall the last time he read a book simply for relaxation, or took a night off to go to a movie or the theatre.

"My personal life here is . . . well, I must say I enjoyed very much living in Halifax."

Did this mean he was sorry he entered federal politics?

"No, not at all. I didn't come here expecting things would be easy, and I have never looked upon politics in terms of personal enjoyment.



STANFIELD
. . . misses Nova Scotia

"But I will say this, that if I had had known some of the difficulties that would arise in Nova Scotia—such as the closing of the Sydney steel plant (it was taken over and operated by the province), I would not have left the province. No, I would not have come."

Having come, however, Mr. Stanfield said he finds the job fascinating and that it challenges all of his physical, emotional and intellectual resources. Sometimes it is frustrating, sometimes satisfying, "and there is no doubt that tensions are greater here than in Nova Scotia because the forces are stronger and more complex."

Typically, Mr. Stanfield pondered the question when asked whether these tensions are affecting him, changing his temperament.

"No, I really don't think so. My theory is that if you're inclined to worry, you'll worry even if you're doing nothing. I think you can step up your capacity to deal with tensions.

"The thing is not to let yourself get tired. Providing you get a good night's sleep, you can face just about everything."

He was asked whether there was any one disappointment in his move to federal politics.

"Yes, it's the limits on discussion and debates at the national level. In Nova Scotia, whether it's the slower pace or the traditions, the people were prepared to listen to a full discussion and debate on any issue. But it seems to me that in order to get a point across on a national basis, it has to be stated very succinctly, over-simplified, and put across in a dramatic way to catch attention."

Mr. Stanfield says television may have influenced this. "Issues must be compressed into a 30-second clip."

Asked whether he likes his political opponent, Prime Minister Trudeau, the Conservative leader said the personal relationship is fine, "but I don't know the man very well."

On several occasions, when the prime minister thought the leader of the Opposition should be informed on certain issues, Mr. Stanfield was invited to lunch at Mr. Trudeau's residence. "Of course we went on to talk about other things, but, no, I don't feel I really know him."

Mr. Stanfield talks about small personal things with the same slow, careful concentration he gives to national issues. He studiously avoids the facile yes or no. Most issues, regardless of size, have two sides.

"Do you really mind having Mr. Diefenbaker sharing the front bench with you?"

"We don't always agree with each other, and to that extent things become a little complicated. And of course, Mr. Diefenbaker's parliamentary skill and color have tended to create a standard which is difficult for me to match.

FREE EVENINGS RARE

"But we have known each other a long time and I think our personal relationship has always been good."

Mr. Stanfield looks at eight daily newspapers on a regular basis "and I glance at one or two others." He and his wife —all the children have left home—occasionally manage to preserve an evening to spend with friends when politics aren't mentioned, but these events are rare.

"What worries me about life here is that you have to make a constant effort to break out of these walls and prevent yourself from being completely enveloped by the job."

Asked if any embarrassments stood out during his four years as party leader, Mr. Stanfield gave the matter a lot of thought. "I am sure there have been many, but none that scorched my soul so much that it immediately comes to mind."

Yukon Pipeline 'Impractical'

By DAVE McINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP)—Some research reports so far are pessimistic about the possibility of building an oil pipeline down the Mackenzie River valley from the Arctic to Edmonton.

Dr. R. M. Isaacs of the Geological Survey of Canada, an arm of the federal energy department, says in a preliminary report based on an on-the-spot survey that the banks of the Mackenzie, at least in some areas, frequently crumble into the river.

"It is a very serious problem," Dr. Isaacs said Friday in an interview.

Some Canadian cabinet ministers have been pushing for a Mackenzie Valley pipeline as one means to forestall an Alaska route which would require oil tanker shipments from southern Alaska along the British Columbia coast to Washington State.

These ministers, including Energy Minister J. J. Greene and Northern Development Minister Jean Chretien, also have said the Canadian Arctic and sub-Arctic environment must be protected against any pipeline breaks.

Dr. Isaacs and his research partner, J. A. Code, will be among those presenting papers at a Feb. 2-4 conference here on potential pipeline construction in the Arctic.

The conference will bring together representatives of government and the petroleum industry for a look at the possibilities of inland and offshore Arctic pipelines.

WORK ON PROBLEM

The energy department has four or five teams working on the problem.

Dr. Isaacs said he is looking at the possibilities of road and airfield constructions as well as pipelines.

"The design of a pipeline naturally will be up to the engineers," he said.

"We will try to predict what will happen when the engineers pick a route. No one has really found any kind of solution yet."

Dr. Isaacs began his survey last summer on the Mackenzie between Sans Sault Rapids and Payne Creek.

He said the survey is scheduled to continue until 1974 at least.

His paper outlining what has been done so far refers to "failure of the slopes" of the Mackenzie. Even without erosion caused by forest fires, the banks made a "downslope creep." Where erosion had occurred, the creep was faster.

Another team comprising I. J. Kurfurst and J. A. Heginbottom from the Geological Survey last summer investigated landslides along the Mackenzie, Great Bear and Brackett rivers in the Fort Norman area.

Results of this survey have not yet been made public but the team paid close attention to what has happened to the Second World War Canol pipeline in the Fort Norman region.

GIRL WIELDS SNOW SHOVEL

MILWAUKEE, Wis. (UPI) — Judy Heffner, 18, this week became the first woman ever hired by the city as an emergency snow shoveler.

The job, which pays $2.50 per hour, was formerly restricted to men by the Bureau of Street Sanitation, but this year the seasonal occupation was opened to both sexes.

Dayan Visits U.S.

TEL AVIV (Reuter) — Israeli Defence Minister Moshe Dayan will visit the United States early next month, a military spokesman announced Thursday. During his fund-raising visit on behalf of the United Jewish Appeal, Dayan will hold talks in Washington with State Secretary William Rogers and other officials, the spokesman said.

Authentic View of Vikings Now Available to Public

The first authenticated European tourists to North America are depicted in this new painting (right) of the Viking long ships, commissioned by Scandinavian Airlines.

Reproductions of the original are being made available to the public by SAS as its contribution to this year's celebration of October as the month in which Leif Erikson discovered America 976 years ago.

"SAS regards this painting as an authentic contribution to the visual knowledge of American history," says B. John Heistein, head of SAS in North America. "We'd like to see it in every schoolroom, as well as in every Scandinavian-American home on this continent."

Painted by American artist Robert Schulz, it is based on painstaking research into the dress, weaponry; shipbuilding and sailing techniques of the 10th century Norsemen.

Package Tours of Peking Like Selling Eiffel Tower

By JOHN BURNS
Special to the Times

PEKING — If the celebrated gentleman who conned an innocent in Paris into buying the Eiffel Tower were still alive he would doubtlessly have a good word about the people who are plying a nice little line in package tours of China, with at least a portion of the cost payable in advance.

If that seems to be a harsh judgment on tourist agencies in Europe and North America which have advertised group tours it is meant to be, for the simple fact is that most tourists have very little prospect of persuading the Chinese to issue them with the visa that they need to enter the country.

NOT ORDINARY

Nine months after ping-pong diplomacy broke upon the world and six months after the Chinese invited President Nixon to visit Peking the authorities are continuing to deny visas to the vast majority of those who apply for them.

This is not to say that China remains the closed society that it was during the cultural revolution — far from it.

Every day new visitors cross the border from Hong Kong, joining the thousands who have been admitted in recent months, but every one of them has some qualification which lifts him out of the class of the ordinary tourist.

The visitors have included businessmen, academics, political sympathizers, journalists, old friends of the Chinese leaders and every kind of celebrity, from an Italian crooner to a Nobel prize-winning biologist. They have ranged from Huey Newton, leader of the Black Panthers, to Nancy Kwan, Hong Kong-born star of the Wold of Suzie Wong, but none of them could properly be styled as tourists.

CRUISE TOUR

The point is worth making, for within the last month there has been another in a series of stories in the western press which purport to show that China is opening up to the tourist trade.

The story, widely circulated by the wire agencies, dealt with plans for the 1,200 passengers making a round-the-world cruise on the liner France to enter China after their arrival in Hong Kong.

French Line officials in New York and Paris were quoted as saying that plans for the China visit were being worked out with the China International Travel Service, which handles the movement of all foreigners in China.

ASTONISHED

The officials said that the Chinese had proposed that the passengers travel by train from Hong Kong to Canton, spending two nights there before flying on to Singapore to catch up with the ship.

One account said that Thomas Cook and Son, the British tourist agency, was hoping to obtain a collective visa for the passengers. The account quoted a line official as saying that the Chinese had not indicated how much the two-day excursion would cost, but added that the official doubted that the matter would be of much concern to the passengers who were paying up to $20,000 each for the 91-day cruise.

Diplomats here were astonished when they heard of the plan, for it appeared to mark a complete reversal of what they have been told by Chinese officials, who have insisted in recent months that China is not is the tourist business and not about to enter it.

So it was with no great surprise that the officials learned this week that the plan has been abandoned.

CAME TO NAUGHT

Attempts to get the Chinese side of the sory proved unavailing, with officials denying any knowledge of the plan. However diplomatic sources here say that while there was extensive correspondence between the French Line and the travel service, all came to naught when the time came to fix details such as timing and accommodation.

"I have no doubt that the French Line people were sincere in thinking that the plan would come off," one diplomat remarked, "but everything I know about the Chinese attitude towards visa applications indicates that it will be some time yet before they are ready to admit large tourist groups."

An interesting sidelight on the story is that the Cook company, which was to have secured the visa for the group, became, last April, the first travel agency to advertise holidays in China. However, in an ad in The Times of London offering an 18-day tour for 350 pounds, the company took care to point out what a number of subsequent imitators have not — that the whole thing was "subject to (Chinese) government approval."

In explaining their position the Chinese rarely go beyond the simple affirmation that they have other priorities to attend to. But the most probable reason is not hard to guess: With their resources already strained by the influx of official visitors they simply could not cope with the additional demands that tourism would impose.

GUIDE SHORTAGE

Hotel accommodation would be the least of their problems since all the cities that tourists would be likely to visit are equipped with large hotels, most of which operate far below capacity. But experience with official visitors in recent months indicates that there would be a serious shortage of guides and interpreters, an essential for the kind of closely-supervised itinerary tourists would be likely to get.

Looking to the future some observers here are inclined to see signs of a change in policy in the recent publication of an English-language map and guide to Peking.

The map, the first to go on sale here since the beginning of the cultural revolution, is contained in an attractively produced folder bearing the words Tourist Map of Peking.

For the moment, however, it appears that the map is intended for the use of resident foreigners and official visitors, not tourists in the normal sense of the word.

Drivers, Please!

PORT COLBORNE, Ont. (CP) — Alice Howe complained in a letter to city council that driverless cars going through a car wash opposite her cottage here have rolled off the exit ramp and into the cottage. Council decided to tell the operator that all cars must have drivers.

Building Materials 'Going Up and Up'

Victoria Times
SATURDAY, JAN. 22, 1972 25
SECOND SECTION

Costs of building materials have risen as much as 80 per cent in the last year, the Vancouver Island Building Supply Dealers' Association said today.

Local industry spokesmen blame high costs of operation and some shortages of lumber on the price increases. High labor costs are another factor.

Bob Weeks, manager of Doman Industries Ltd., said building supplies are "a rising market now" and that costs "just keep going up and up."

NO RELIEF

"Everything is on the move up," Weeks said, and no relief from the high prices is in sight.

He said a percentage increase of 50 or 60 per cent would be a conservative one to estimate the escalation of costs.

Weeks said the effect of the higher prices is more startling now because prices in the industry were very low for a number of years.

"It's the sharp increase that hurts," he said.

The supply dealers' association statement quoted prices for such items as utility 2x4, used extensively in apartment framing, as increasing 80 per cent in the last 12 months. Also mentioned was a 39 per cent increase in the prices for 2x10s in the same period.

"Fir ply has gone up twice in the last six weeks, making a total increase in the past 12 months in excess of 20 per cent for many popular fir ply items," the statement released by secretary C. C. Warren said.

"These major increases for lumber and plywood were inevitable in view of the depressed and unprofitable giveaway prices that were in effect last winter.

"In addition to the price rise, many shortages have developed in lumber and plywood, with delivery delays of two to three months not uncommon."

Other items the association listed as escalating are Gyproc board, fiberglass insulation, asphalt roofing, insulating wall sheathing, particle board, sewer pipe, steel garage doors, glass and ceramic tile.

MORE COMING?

Contract negotiations between labor and management in the building industry are due to start soon, and may signal yet another increase in the costs of materials.

Eighteen unions in B.C. will be seeking shorter working hours and increased fringe benefits with their new contracts.

Negotiating will be the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council and the Construction Labor Relations Association, bargaining agent for management.

Current contracts involving more than 50,000 workers expire March 31.

NEY
. . . part-time director

Children's Clinic Head Named

Dr. Phillip Ney will be the part-time director of a new psychiatric unit for children to be opened on the sixth floor of the Eric Martin Institute.

Agreement on how the long-delayed unit will be directed and financed has been reached between the provincial government and Royal Jubilee Hospital, Dr. A. C. Pickles, the hospital's executive director, said Friday.

Initially the unit, only the second one in the province, will have beds for 10 patients but ultimately 20 beds are planned. Hopefully it can be in operation by the early summer, said Pickles, although a number of steps remain.

Under the agreement, Ney, a child psychiatrist, will be responsible for designing the over-all treatment program, staff training and liaison with other agencies involved in child care. The director's job is expected to occupy about half his time.

In addition psychiatrists will be able to participate in care of patients and family doctors will be an integral part of the unit, said Pickles.

Opening of the unit will depend on provincial approval of a staffing budget, completion of some structural modifications, furnishing and equipping it, he added.

The unit for children had been planned since the psychiatric institute opened two years ago. It was delayed while doctors and hospital argued a clinical director was essential and the province balked at paying both a director and doctors on a fee-for-service basis.

UVic's New Head Looks at Issues

On Feb. 1, the University of Victoria gets a new president, a man who hopes to calm the waters of unrest after several years of disruption and uncertainty on the Gordon Head campus.

From all indications, Hugh Farquhar seems eminently qualified for the job. He has been around UVic, in its various stages, for most of the last 40 years.

He has been a student, junior and senior faculty member, dean, and now president. Or he will be when he takes over from outgoing president Bruce Partridge.

Already Dr. Farquhar has set the wheels turning for a new look for UVic. Two commissions have been set up, aimed at producing reports within six months. They will study university governance and academic development.

Another group is at work on the university's controversial tenure document, cause of much of UVic's problems between faculty, students and administration.

'. . . feeling of confidence'

Farquhar, 61, has most recently been dean pro tem of the faculty of education, a position with which the university lured him out of semi-retirement last year.

He was educated at Victoria Normal School and Victoria College and taught at both institutions. He was director of UVic's summer session for 12 years and has served as executive assistant to the university's top administrator.

Farquhar says he is not looking much beyond June 30 as far as his tenure in the job is concerned. For his opinions on university problems between now and then, Times education reporter Brian Butters obtained the following interview.

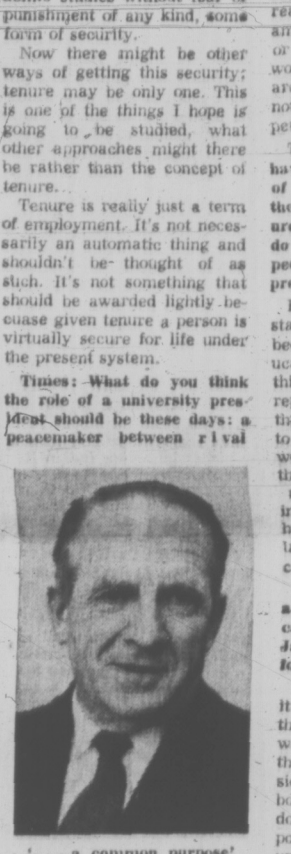
Times: What do you consider to be the main problem facing the university at this time, and what do you propose to do about it?

Farquhar: I think it's difficult to comment on this with particular respect to our university. I think all universities have some major problems today, one of which of course is scarce resources and one of which is some lack of confidence on the public's part. I think the public is questioning universities as never before, and I think universities are going to have to be responsible and accountable to society for what they do.

One of the problems is to try to restore a feeling of confidence with the public, with society. That is one of the major things. I think the universities have to determine just what it is society expects of them. I think they have to reassess constantly what they're doing, they have to examine their programs, examine their goals, because after all, they are dependent upon society for their very existence.

I think universities have to consider the needs of young people today. If they're going to take young people into the university for four or five years, they have to give some thought to what the young people are going to have when they come out, whether there is going to be a place in society for them or not. I believe very strongly that universities exist for students, and I think perhaps we have to remind ourselves of this from time to time.

Times: Tenure, and the quest for it by faculty members, has been the cause of much of UVic's troubles over the last few years, from Tarlton-Schwartz to Goode-Graff-and-Jain. In fact, it can probably be fairly said that tenure has caused the downfall of two UVic presidents, Malcolm Taylor and Bruce Partridge. What is your opinion on the issue of tenure, from the point of view of a university president and from the point of view of an academic?



'. . . a common purpose'

Farquhar: This is one of the areas I'm very conscious of and is a particularly complex problem. We have a committee which is presently studying the whole concept of tenure; we have a tenure document we've worked on for some years which is proving to be not entirely satisfactory. I've suggested that the committee should make a fresh start and study the whole concept of tenure, what tenure means, why we have it, what we want it to do, instead of trying to patch an unsatisfactory document.

I think the main issue is one of academic freedom. This is the basic thing and this is the thing that all university people seek to guard jealously.

The right to teach, the right to do research, the right to express their opinion in those areas in which they are recognized experts. They have to be able to do this in an atmosphere where they have a sense of security.

Therefore we have to create some mechanism whereby people can feel secure, so they can carry out their academic studies without fear of punishment of any kind, some form of security.

Now there might be other ways of getting this security; there may be only one. This is one of the things I hope is going to be studied, what other approaches might there be rather than the concept of tenure.

Tenure is really just a term of employment. It's not necessarily an automatic thing and shouldn't be thought of as such. It's not something that should be awarded lightly because given tenure a person is virtually secure for life under the present system.

Times: What do you think the role of a university president should be these days: a peacemaker between rival factions on campus, an innovator, a co-ordinator, any of these things . . .?

Farquhar: In the first place, I would hope that there wouldn't be rival factions on campus. I feel we should all be contributing towards a common purpose. Now we're not all going to agree and we can be critical of one another, but there's a way of being constructively critical too and still working towards a common end.

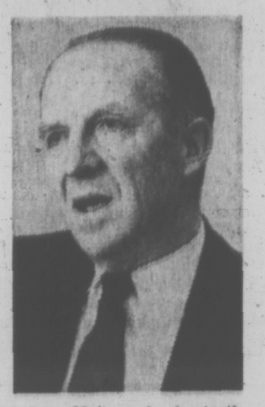
However, I have indicated that I feel an administrator, and the president is of course an administrator, has the job of providing the resources, the buildings, equipment, finance, so that the faculty may conduct their teaching and research. I think the job is to establish a climate in which academic activities may proceed. I think a president should provide leadership and encouragement. I'm not sure that he should be an innovator but he should encourage innovation, innovation which should come from others, from the faculty.

I think he should be everything that he can to enable faculty to make an optimum contribution.

Times: Do you look upon yourself as merely a caretaker in this job or would you consider taking the job on an indefinite basis if it were offered to you?

Farquhar: If I were only here for six months, I would not consider myself a caretaker, or a man just filling the gap. Absolutely not. I think if we proceed that way, we could go on forever. Presidents come and go. We've got a history of this and if we considered each person to be here for a year or two, not to do anything until someone else comes along, we'd do nothing.

So if I were only to be here for six months, I would still feel it to be my responsibility to take some definite action to see that the university moves ahead. That's the answer to that question. As far as how long I'm going to be here is concerned, I haven't got my crystal ball, I have no idea. I will conduct myself as if I were going to be here. It may be six months, it may be a year, it may be a year and six months. I don't know. This will not affect the way I operate.



'. . . Make a fresh start'

Times: Could it be longer than a year and six months? Would you like to to be longer?

Farquhar: I think this is too difficult to say. I have made no commitments. I agreed that I would come in. If in the opinion of the board of governors, they felt I could be of help, then I would accept the position. I didn't seek it. I see it as a challenge. If I reach the point where I feel I am not making a contribution or not making progress, I won't waste much time around here. I am personally not thinking in terms of a long period of time.

Times: There seems to have been a considerable lack of trust on the campus since the various contract and tenure disputes came up. What do you propose to do to get people to trust you as the president of the university?

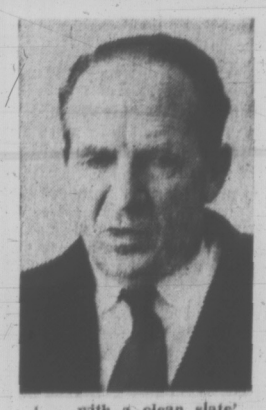
Farquhar: First of all I stand on my reputation. I've been in this community in education for many years and I think I have established a reputation for being trustworthy. At my age, I'm not likely to change in this respect. I've worked with many people on this campus and I know that many people have confidence in me and do trust me. Now I have to demonstrate to the university community that I can be trusted.

Times: You have expressed a reluctance to reopen the cases of Goede, Graff and Jain. Any particular reasons for feeling this way?

Farquhar: I'm not sure that it is a reluctance. The whole thing was dealt with before I was here. It was dealt with by the board and the commission's findings. I believe the board has accepted this. I don't think that I am in a position to even talk about it unless the board of governors directed me to. My understanding is that there is an appeal in the hands of the visitor and as long as an appeal rests there, I think it would be entirely out of order for me to discuss it.

Times: On the issue of the academic vice-president which UVic doesn't have, how much longer do you think the university can function properly without this role being filled?

Farquhar: As you understand, I am still, not in the president's seat, so there are certain things that I can't do. I hope that there will be some kind of appointment made in the academic area within the very near future.



'. . . with a clean slate'

Times: Are you talking about somebody on a pro tem basis, for example?

Farquhar: You will recall that the board of governors has asked that no external appointments be made in top administrative position for the present. This is a policy. Therefore, if there is an appointment made at this time; it probably would be an internal appointment. It is possible that such an appointment would be an acting or pro tem appointment.

Times: Is there a search going on right now for a permanent person for this position?

Farquhar: For a permanent person, no there isn't.

'. . . Presidents come and go'

Clubhouse Plan Dead for Now

Saanich will have to abandon, at least for the foreseeable future, its plans for a proper clubhouse at the municipally-owned Cedar Hill golf course.

The prediction Friday from Ald. William Noel, chairman of the golf course management committee, came after the committee studied tenders for a 32-foot extension to the present clubhouse and pro shop, at the end of Derby Road on the east side of the course.

Noel said because the tenders were higher than had been expected, "it will be quite some time before we can have a clubhouse per se."

The original plan had been to make the present building solely a pro shop, when a separate clubhouse was feasible, but Noel said the combined "makeshift" facilities will have to continue.

Three bids for the extension project were received, and the committee decided to recommend that the contract go to the low bidder, H. E. Fowler and Sons Ltd., at $40,985.

Arnold Construction bid $41,000 and Noble and McLeod Ltd. $44,249.

Noel said 75 per cent of the on-site labor costs, or about $15,000, will be recovered under the capital works aspect of the federal government's employment incentive program.

The extension will be used for additional dining and liquor storage facilities.

STATEMENT ON PARTRIDGE

University of Victoria board of governors chairman Lloyd McKenzie said today he plans to convene a special meeting of the board to prepare a statement clarifying the circumstances of Bruce Partridge's departure from the university.

McKenzie said the board will likely meet Monday to prepare a "more comprehensive" statement than those which have been made on the terms of Partridge's terminal settlement and the circumstances of his resignation.

Partridge announced his resignation Nov. 16.

McKenzie declined to comment further on the situation, which has seen the board of governors criticized for setting on a figure which has been reported as high as $80,000 for Partridge. It was said at the time the settlement was compensation in lieu of future expectations.

McKenzie had said the settlement figure was "a deceptive one," in that it contained pension benefits Partridge accrued while at UVic.

Asked at the time if $80,000 was a "realistic" figure for the settlement, McKenzie had said it was.

New Liquor Store To Be Self Service

The Capital Region's third self-service government liquor store will be opening in about two weeks, liquor commissioner William Bruce said Friday.

The 7,000-square-foot outlet will be in Nootka Place, a renovated building adjoining the existing Humboldt Street liquor store, which will close.

Two other self-serve stores are at Fort and Foul Bay shopping centre and in Sidney.

Bruce said the new store would be about the same over-all size as the closing store, but much more convenient and comfortable, decorated in B.C. woods.

CRASH KILLS MAN BUT SON UNHURT

A Sidney man was killed Friday night but his son in the car with him escaped unhurt when the auto struck two traffic islands on the Pat Bay Highway at McTavish Road.

Ronald William Higgins, 35, of 2054 Ardwell Drive was pronounced dead on arrival at Rest Haven Hospital in Sidney.

The RCMP said Higgins' son, Curtis Brendon Higgins, 9, was not hurt in the accident which occurred shortly after 9 p.m.

Police said the driver was northbound on the highway and it was raining. The car rolled on to its roof after hitting the islands and skidded about 75 feet.

Deputy Coroner G. A. Gerrie will conduct an inquiry, police said.

Ad Ban Case Quashed

The first court case involving the province's liquor advertising ban to reach a conclusion ended in Victoria Friday when the judge quashed the charge on a technicality.

Provincial court Judge E. F. N. Robinson did so after prosecutor Peter Birkett agreed with an earlier defence counsel argument that the question of distrubution involved in the charge meant more than the distribution of a single item.

The charge had been laid in December by Vancouver resident David Bader, one of several court moves he has made to test the validity of the controversial liquor-tobacco ad ban introduced by the government last year.

In the case before Robinson, Mrs. Violet Holden, a sighted employee at the Canadian National Institute for the Blind newsstand beside the Legislative Buildings, was charged with unlawfully distributing a Time magazine containing liquor advertising.

Her lawyer, Cecil Branson, had argued last week that distributing meant more than one article to more than one person. Birkett said Friday the Crown had looked into court precedents on the question of distribution and Branson "appears to have made a valid point."

Several publishers challenging the consitutionality of the ban have an action before the B.C. Supreme Court. Still to be heard as well are two other charges laid in Nanaimo by Bader and involving B.C. Ferries manager Monty Aldous and two ferry newsstand operators.

Needed Here: An Affair of the Heart

THIS WEEK I VISITED with a useful, active man who spent more than half of 1971 on the edge of a precipice. Not literally, of course. But looking back on his half-year in the shadow of sudden death, that's how he chooses to describe the experience.

It began when his heart served notice on him with an attack that made him an instant candidate for Royal Jubilee Hospital's coronary ward. He survived to enter on the shadowed life of those who wait in the knowledge that the next slugging may prove fatal.

He had a deeply-worried wife and a couple of apprehensive children, a house with a sizeable mortgage on it, and a job at which he could no longer work.

Eventually, he would cross to Vancouver for the open heart operation that could restore him to normal living. But his name was down near the bottom of the elective surgery list, and the sludge-narrowed artery that helped fuel his pump wasn't going to unplug itself.

So he waited, hoping for the best but prepared for the worst, until his name came up. Then he and his wife crossed to Vancouver — he to go into hospital, she to spend two lonely, costly, weeks in a city where she had neither relatives nor friends.

The man I listened to was among the lucky. For one thing, his condition wasn't listed as acute, although it could have become so at any time during those months of waiting for the surgery that Victoria can't yet provide.

His financial resources, though badly strained, tided him and his family over the rough time. He didn't have to take on debts that would be years in the paying, or seek welfare, and his job was there when he was ready to resume it.

By no means every candidate for open heart surgery at Vancouver General Hospital or St. Paul's — the only two in this province able to provide it — is as fortunate as he.

Families have been ruined by that outrageously long delay. Fathers used to pulling their weight have become so guilt-ridden over months of enforced idleness that they lapse into a state of complete silence.

The fault doesn't rest with the two Vancouver hospitals. As one doctor puts it, they are coping brilliantly with the impossible: They handled upwards of 300 open heart operations last year. About 100 of these were on Vancouver Islanders.

Sixty of those on the list today reside in Greater Victoria.

For the non-acute cases in need of surgery, waiting time is now a horrific eight months.

I'm not being entirely unselfish when I suggest this isn't good enough. After all, life being a chancy business, I could find myself on that list. So could you.

Victoria — and Royal Jubilee Hospital to be specific — has an operating theatre planned with heart surgery among its uses when the West and Royal wings were built. Since the heart-lung machine and the heart-saving by-pass operation hadn't then been developed, the planners showed commendable forethought.

I learn from Royal Jubilee spokesmen that this operating room could be renovated, wired and set up for open-heart surgery at a cost of $25,000.

It could be equipped for something between $65,000 and $70,000. Equipment would include a $21,000 medical marvel which in outline looks rather like an old fashioned dresser with stand-up mirror frame attached. This is the heart-lung machine, which takes over from these organs the job of oxygenating and circulating the patient's blood.

The heart is by-passed: repairs, which may include the grafting of a pipeline to take over from the clogged artery section, are carried out.

That's a vast over-simplification of highly specialized procedures that occupy a team of surgeons, technical staff and nurses for several hours.

We have much more than the nucleus of a heart team available in Victoria. What's lacking is the money which would permit such a team to salvage badly-damaged hearts at a yearly operating cost of about $137,000.

That sum, plus the capital costs I've listed, is not precisely peanuts. Local Kiwanians who have given sturdy help before in matters of the heart, hope to raise $14,000 toward the heart-lung machine itself. Our British Columbia government would then chip in the remaining $7,000.

But that's no more than a bit from the over-all funding needed.

And when will that be available? When will the Vancouver Islander in need of cardiovascular repairs be able to check in at Royal Jubilee for a renewed lease on life?

Over-simplifying again, I suggest it will materialize when Premier Bennett's government springs the funds required. Until then, try to be of good heart. Because if you're not, your name might be added to that long, long Vancouver list.

Exquisite Indian carvings . . .

Never, outside of a museum, have we seen such exquisite Indian carvings as the four argillite pieces by Haida Indian Ron Wilson which greeted our eyes at the Handloom this week . . . Argillite, we learned, is a black stone found only in the Queen Charlotte Islands . . . Wilson . . . who signs his name "Gitsgah" . . . has fashioned it into two fairly small carvings . . . A shark sharman (medicine man) and a woman riding a killer whale . . . Sheer perfection and consummate artistry! . . . The black stone is polished to a soft, satin-like lustre you long to touch . . . Much as we'd like to carol It's spring, it's spring! . . . fact of the matter is, it's still winter . . . and pretty cold, to boot! Paraphrasing the "save the surface and you save all" slogan . . . we'd like to say "keep your hands and head warm and you're warm all over" . . . Which brings us to Wilson's really terrific selection of cozy woollen gloves, mitts, scarves, tams and toques . . . The qualities of good crystal are many . . . and each collector will have his or her own opinion as to which are the most important . . . It's a rare crystal which has all the desirable qualities . . . and Galway crystal is certainly one of the elite! . . . This old Irish firm has just introduced an entirely new idea in plain crystal . . . a pattern called "Gaelic Light" which entranced us when we saw it at Sydney Reynolds this week . . . It comes in a complete suite of glasses . . . goblets, sherbets, clarets, sherrys and old fashioneds . . . Flip these various glasses with a finger and . . . if you're musically inclined . . . you could play a tune, they ring out so true and clear! . . . The really new thing about this crystal is that it's made in such a way as to reflect all light . . . Completely colorless itself, it takes on the colors of its surroundings . . . Shapes are singularly graceful . . . moreover every glass is considerably larger than what you usually see . . . Gaelic Light, we understand, was designed especially for the American market . . . and here in Canada you'll find it only at Sydney Reynolds . . . priced at $6.50 each piece . . . Its plainness, beauty and light-reflecting properties make it really outstanding . . . Why not go have a look at it? . . . Sydney Reynolds Ltd., 801 Government St., 383-3931.

Maybe you're a decisive type and already know exactly what you want for your new home . . . That's fine and dandy . . . But could be that with so many lovely patterns in silver, china and crystal to choose from you're in a bit of a state of confusion . . . How will this look with that? . . . Should it be contemporary or traditional? . . . Best way to find out is to make an early appointment with Mrs. R. . . . NO PEACE AT THE TOP FOR MICHAEL

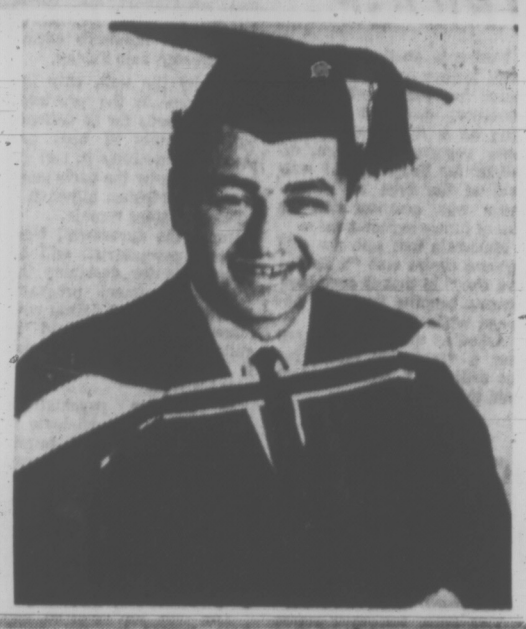
Two years ago, Michael Bush was a metallurgist in Australia. He had a wife, family and was set on a successful career. No one knew the emptiness inside him. Now, as Swami Nitya Bodhananda he has renounced the material world. And love has filled the void within him.



'Hollow in Heart' Led Him to India

By NITYA BODHANANDA

Special to The Times

BIHAR, India. — Before my beginning there was the house, the car, the television set and the telephone. I had a university degree, a profession and a wife and family.

According to the whispered rules of society I had strived, and attained.

I quickly satiated all my desires, except one. Deep, deep down inside, in the region of my heart, there was a hollow space, a hollow feeling, a feeling that said: I want to love, I want bliss, I want to understand myself and others.

Churches and synagogues could not satisfy me, nor could the philosophies of Sartre, Kant or Timothy Leary.

Then I met a little lady with light in her eyes and the message of yoga on her lips. She explained to me that yoga meant unity, and the goal of yoga is reached when the pure ego-less consciousness in man's soul becomes aware of itself. She said both animal and man think intelligently, but man knows that he is thinking. The practice of yoga techniques accelerate the progress to higher levels.

The path of yoga starts with the body, then on to conscious mind, emotion, intellect and then to subconscious and unconscious mind.

Learned of Gurus

Then I learned of the great yoga teachers in India, the gurus.

And so I set off for India to find my master, who could guide me into a life of selfless service and fourfold development of body, intellect, mind and emotion.

I met my guru in the ashram in Bihar, and this was the beginning of my new life. My first practice was a yogic technique of washing the intestines by drinking 16 glasses of lukewarm saline water. Between each glass I performed various exercises which twist, stretch and squeeze the digestive system. Thus my whole body was washed free from toxins.

Then my guru told me to get up at 3 a.m. every morning, practice asanas, pranayam (controlled breathing techniques) and meditation. After that I had to work cleaning latrines, sweeping floors, writing letters for the office, teaching English to Indian students, studying Sanskrit, psychology, physiology and philosophy.

An ashram is not a retreat, a rest house, or a recreation centre for selfish beings who want to get away from society. An ashram is a place for work. It is only through work that you can develop a practical philosophy for harmonious living. Then you can analyse and eliminate these impurities of the mind.

I trusted my guru and followed his advice. I lived a very simple life — early morning rises, one meal of very plain food a day, no personal possessions, yoga practices and plenty of work.

But when I tried to meditate or sleep at night, my mind was full of forceful desires and thoughts. I asked my guru: "What is happening to me? Am I going mad? Before I came to the ashram I could meditate and sleep and yoga made my mind more peaceful, but now my mind is like a seething volcano."

Path to Purity

He laughed and said to me: "You, by your own volition, have left the life of worldly pursuits and it was a wise decision, but now your habits and desires, which were hitherto satisfied, are screaming for attention. This is the path to the purification of consciousness —

"Don't remain a part of your thoughts, but maintain constant detached awareness of them and also of your body and feelings. The "seen" is often restless but the "seer" is always at peace. Maintain this attitude and soon your old habits and desires will be eliminated."

With this new understanding, I settled down to the long path of my new life and quickly I grew. I found the way to spontaneous and relaxed meditation, in which my awareness moved deep into the unconscious mind, unlocking the doors of inner life. I found how to love all my fellow men.

After some time I joined the order of Sannyas and I received the title of Swami. Sannyas means dedication to a purpose and each sannyasin has made a resolution, to carry him through his whole life. Swami means, "he who is master of the mind."

His duty is not only to train other minds, but also to help man to overlook the petty disqualifications of other personalities, to accept all sects, creeds, religions and races and let the good in others shine predominant.

Therefore, I do not feel that I opted out of society, but rather that my action will become a chain-reaction and that, in the final analyses, my own change will bring about a change in the whole fabric of society.

The Vegetarian Way

By HELEN MELNYK
Times Staff

Slap a sizzling, spicy steak in front of your average gourmand and he'll dig in without further ado.

He doesn't worry that his meal was not long ago wandering about some barnyard.

More and more people are thinking just that, however. And they don't like the idea.

One glimpse into a slaughter-house is enough to turn anyone into a vegetarian then and there, says Gordon Limbrick, a yoga instructor and practising vegetarian for the past 15 years.

Limbrick and his family are part of the growing number of people across Canada and the United States who are getting "turned-off" meat.

The local vegetarian population has increased by about 40 per cent in the last two years, estimates the manager of one Victoria health food store.

As well as humane considerations, people become vegetarians for economic, religious and health reasons.

"I don't want to make my stomach a graveyard for defenceless creatures," said Limbrick. "They have as much right to live as I do."

Taking life is contrary to the principles of Yoga he teaches. Yogis also believe that a flesh diet drags the mind down to the animal level. Thus when thoughts should be stilled in meditation, they'll be wandering elsewhere.

Better Health

Since his switch-over to vegetarianism, Limbrick says he has enjoyed better health and greater energy. Colds, headaches, and stomachaches have all become things of the past. At 55, he has a trim physique that would be the envy of many a teen-ager.

The Limbricks get their protein from a variety of foods such as soya bean products, cottage cheese, yoghurt, buttermilk, beans, peas, lentils and nuts. Their meals are simple, lightly cooked and free of spices and condiments.

A typical day's menu is as follows: fruit for breakfast; a lunch of salad, cottage cheese with banana, and nuts and raisins for dessert; supper may consist of an appetizer of grapefruit and cottage cheese, followed by two green vegetables, rice, a soya casserole or nut loaf, and a dessert of fresh or dried fruit and nuts.

Beverages include milk and fruit juices.

Although the Limbricks' son, David, has never tasted eggs, meat or fish, he seems to thrive on the diet. At age three his noise and energy level would match that of any other child the same age.

The Limbrick family are lacto-vegetarians, which means they use dairy products, but not eggs. There are varying degrees of vegetarianism. The strictest form allows only fruit, vegetables and nuts, while others add dairy products, eggs and even fish.

Dining Problem

Although vegetarianism may be a growing trend, it's still an omnivore's world. Dining out is something of a problem for the person who abstains from meat.

While travelling, Elaine Limbrick does not stick to a meatless diet because "restaurants are not geared for the vegetarian." When supping with non-vegetarian friends, she eats what they do to avoid "embarrassing" anyone.

Three years ago, David and Elizabeth Grubb converted to vegetarianism, when the latter became sold on the idea through taking Limbrick's yoga classes. Mrs. Grubb was off meat and eggs throughout her pregnancy, and has been feeding 11-month-old Fiona a vegetarian diet. Special high-protein baby formulas can be bought at various stores, she said.

Switching to a vegetarian cusine took some re-orientation, said Mrs. Grubb, a housewife. Like substituting stuffed peppers for the Christmas turkey. But she found that the old family favorite recipes could be easily converted into vegetarian fare by using soya products in place of meat. Two of the recipes she likes best are printed by the Times.

While vegetarians all say their diet is healthy, experts in the nutritional field cannot reach any such happy agreement. For every scientific study stating it is healthy, there is another which says that it is not.

A local physician, himself a vegetarian, said there is a greater incidence of such ills as coronary disease and hardening of the arteries amongst heavy flesh-eaters. A meat diet is higher in saturated fats. He said he knew of a patient whose asthma cleared up when he went off meat.

"A person can get all the nourishment he needs from fruits, vegetables and nuts," he said. "After four or five years of age, milk is not essential in a child's diet. No one food is indispensable. Good nutrition is attained by the proper combination of foods.

"But to be a vegetarian, you have to know what you're doing," he emphasized. "You must know how to prepare and combine foods so that all the essential proteins, vitamins and minergis are present.

Nutrition is still a new study, said Sandra Reid, home economist for the B.C. Department of Agriculture. "So there is an argument for almost everything."

She said there are some facts a vegetarian should know in the interests of good health. The average adult requirement of protein is about three ounces a day. Meat is called a perfect protein because it contains the eight amino acids that are essential in a person's daily diet. Though other foods are sources of protein, none contain all eight.

Although meat-eaters may not have to worry as much, their diet can also be deficient if they aren't careful, she pointed out.

Call an abstainer a "nut" or "fruit" and he'll cite his vegetarian predecessors: Buddha, Plato, Socrates, Rousseau, Gandhi, Bernard Shaw.

It takes a sharp omnivore to shoot back, "You forgot Hitler."

Guess What's Missing

Three-year-old David (top photo) doesn't notice that there's no meat on the table since he has never tasted it in his life. He and mother, Elaine Limbrick seem to be enjoying the vegetarian supper father, Gordon, whipped up. Being a vegetarian means you're extra careful to see that vegetables and fruits are fresh. Elizabeth Grubb (left photo) inspects produce before buying for the family supper.

'Trash Power' Key to Future Fuel

GARLAND, Tex. (UPI) — A group of southwestern scientists say they have developed what may be "the power source of the future."

The new power source allegedly can convert ordinary trash into electricity at a fraction of present power costs and may prevent such children's diseases as cystic fibrosis.

No War Talk

"We really don't have a name for this thing yet," said Dr. Henry Cobble. "Right now we just call it 'The Product.'"

The Product also can be used as fuel for automobiles, to make industrial diamonds, as an "extremely cheap source of food" and even as a powerful superweapon.

"We don't like to talk about the use of it for warfare," said Cobble, who has a doctorate degree in emulsion biochemistry from Sussex University in England.

Cobble and several scientists for Rozar, Inc., sponsored a special dinner recenly to announce plans for building a prototype reactor to produce the product.

Some 50 to 60 scientists — biochemists, physicists, and just practicing physicians — have been meeting in their spare time since 1952 at "Rozar, Inc." to work out prototypes of futuristic inventions.

"It's strange but true," said Cobble. "We're all very dedicated to our work. We work usually 7 p.m. to 2 a.m. and go back to our regular jobs to get money to finance our true interests. Someday we hope to do research alone, pure and simple."

Portable Freezer

The scientists have also been working on a revolutionary portable freezer and on a serum derived from a cactus-like plant that is being tested as a cure for cancer.

Cobble explained that the product utilizes a simple destruction distillation process using total city waste, except metals and glass. According to him the raw gases are pulled off and sold in bulk to other chemical companies to process into their specific needs, producing such substances as methanol, acetone and acetics acids.

"We have figured that the amount of trash produced in the city of Dallas in one day could produce enough electricity to power the entire United States for one day," Cobble said.

Dr. Roland White said the product could also produce amino acids, used in the body to build cells. He said persons whose bodies don't produce enough amino acids — such as children with cystic fibrosis — can use the product for that purpose.

"The aminos come out of the last stage of the distillation. We probably will perfect the process and show it's workable and then let some other company product it," White said.

Think Tank

The scientists eventually hope to incorporate themselves as a fulitime "think tank" but meanwhile are financing the project experiments through sale of a line of domestics and other chemical ingredients discovered in their work.

Pinched Hubby

HAMBURG, West Germany (WNS) — Inge Mueller, 34 has complained that her blonde apartment neighbor has run off with Oskar Mueller, her 38-year-old husband. "She was new in the house, and I thought she had dropped in to borrow a cup of sugar," explained Frau Mueller. "But while I was in the kitchen, she took Oskar instead."

Hose Hurts Toes

LONDON (AP) Pantyhose may improve the looks of a girl's legs but pressure could lead to "deformation of the toes," a British chiropodist said.

Equality Aim of 'Supernag'

TORONTO (CP) — Some women resent being called nags but Irene Johnson, a deputy minister in the federal government, says she'll have to be a "super nag" for the next few years.

But the target of her nagging won't be her family. Instead, as one of three public service commissioners in the federal government, it will be directed against deputy heads of federal government departments in an effort to get them to give female employees chances at job opportunities on an equal basis with men.

"I'm afraid a woman is needed to do this sort of job," she said in an interview Wednesday. "A special interest needs to be taken in women at this stage. I used to think that if the opportunities were there it was up to women to do something about it. Now my ideas have changed.

The wife of a retired naval officer and mother of a 13-year-old son, Mrs. Johnson is the only woman who has reached the deputy-minister level in the federal public service.

'Appalling'

"The situation is even more appalling when you consider my job," she said. "In my job, I don't administer the department or report to Parliament. That's done by one of the male commissioners.

"I've taken it upon myself to do something about the position of women, both in government and industry."

She said she was appalled to learn that of the 55,000 women among the 200,000 public servants, there only is one woman senior epecutive compared with 500 men in top categories.

And out of 300 university graduates being given middle-management training, only seven chosen are women, she said.

Mrs. Johnson, a graduate in honors law at the University of Toronto with a masters degree in economics, said she is keeping track of how women with the right job qualifications are climbing the ladder in comparison with men with the same qualifications.

She also is concerned with the bulk of women in government service who are at the bottom level. At present she is trying to get department heads to give secretaries with the right potential the chance to upgrade their status and thus compete with men for a higher job.

Plays Key Role

She expects to play a key role when the federal government begins looking for women to fill top jobs, especially after the cabinet later this year examines the royal commission report on the status of women.

Bachelor of Hearts

DEAR ABBY: I am a 19-year-old, conservative, responsible, open-minded guy. I am living away from home at college.

My roommate (I'll call him Dave) and I have a problem. Recently, two very close friends of his (both girls) offered to share an apartment with us next year. Dave has known these girls since he was a little kid. They are like sisters to him. I believe his intentions are 100 per cent honorable.

A setup like this would give us great benefits. Dave and I wouldn't have to hassle with mending clothes, cooking, or housekeeping. Chris and Kathy (not their real names) would end up with a few extra bucks a month, plus they wouldn't have to worry about living alone, defenceless, like many girls do these days. At any rate, it would cost us all less than what it's costing us now. The only problem is that it is a bit extreme.

Tell me, Abby, what would your advice be to your kid if he hit you with a proposition like this?—Undecided.

DEAR UNDECIDED: It's highly unlikely that my "kid" will ever hit me with a proposition like that, but if he does I will let you know. Meanwhile, if at this stage of your life, you need help in recognizing the social boobytraps in premarital cohabitation, I doubt if you would take my advice seriously. So I'll withhold it.

DEAR ABBY: I have a friend who has gone in for "meditating." She meditates twice a day for 20 minutes, and when she does, she takes the telephone off the hook and forgets to put it back on.

I get so angry when I call her and find her line "busy" for hours on end. I have even phoned her neighbor and asked her to please ring my friend's doorbell and tell her that her phone is off the hook.

I will donate $25 to your favorite charity if you publish this letter!—Irritated.

DEAR IRRITATED: Give the $25 to your local Mental Health Association. And try to control your irritation. It's bad for blood pressure.

DEAR ABBY: I am 18 and my fiance (call him Bob) is 20. We have gone together off and on for four years and have been engaged for over a year. Bob is in the navy and makes $400 a month.

We want to get married, but my problem is my folks. They don't think we can make it on $400 a month. Bob is making more than my father. My Mom doesn't work, and we have four kids in our family, so I don't know how my folks figure, do you? Please help.—Generation Gap.

DEAR GAP: If your father is making it on less than $400 a month with six mouths to feed, it is obvious your folks have other reasons for objecting to your marrying Bob. Find out what they are.

Confidential to "Second Time Around": Brush the stardust out of your eyes, Lady, and don't worry about "insulting" him. No matter how "honorable" a man you think he is, it's better to have a pre-nuptial agreement and not need one, than to have needed one, and not have it. This agreement should spell out who gets what in case the marriage doesn't work out. And who's entitled to how much should you precede him in death, or vice versa.

Heroin Addicts Get Younger

TORONTO (CP) — Heroin addicts in Toronto are getting younger all the time.

They have changed so much during the last year that the Addiction Research Foundation has altered its criteria for accepting patients for its treatment drug program.

Addicts today, compared with even a year ago, are younger — 21 or 22 or even younger — have been addicted a shorter time, generally use a lot of different drugs, are less likely to have criminal records other than for possession of drugs, are more likely to retain some connection with their families and come from every social class.

Toronto not only has more heroin addicts, but they are no longer to be found almost exclusively downtown.

In North Toronto, for instance, 70 to 80 young people, some of them in school, are known to be at least occasional users of heroin. About 30, ranging in age from 15 to 25, have become addicted.

Doctors give daily doses of methadone, also a highly addictive drug, to combat the driving need for heroin and the criminal activities indispensable to raising money for a heroin habit.

Costs $20 a Shot

The current going rate for heroin is $20 a capsule.

As part of a rigorous assessment prior to admission to the methadone maintenance program, the unit staffers at the Addiction Research Foundation determine by testing urine samples whether the individual is addicted to heroin.

In the case of a young person, they also want to be assured that total withdrawal has been attempted at some time.

In 1967, there were an estimated 1,243 narcotics users in Toronto, mostly addicted to heroin and with an average age of about 40.

Most had a jail record, most had been addicted for at least 15 years and most had been involved in criminal activities before they became addicted to drugs.

The unit was set up to treat this type of addict, but before it was in full operation, the problem and the addicts began to change.

Less Criminal Types

The foundation staff found that for the last year addicts have been younger — most of them 21 or 22. They have used a variety of drugs for five or six years, but have been addicted to narcotics for only two years.

Fewer have criminal records and these are mainly for offences associated with drugs. Men outnumber women by more than two to one.

More than 90 per cent of the older, criminal addict group started into drugs with a narcotic, usually heroin.

Among the younger group, only 14 per cent started on heroin, and most had used a great variety of drugs including hashish, amphetamines speed and various hallucinogens.

Originally, the narcotic addiction unit ruled that to be accepted into the methadone maintenance program an addict must be over 21 and have been addicted for at least two years.

The age of admission now has been lowered to 18 and the two-year addiction period dropped. The foundation says use of narcotics can lead to confirmed addiction within six months.

Addicts are not accepted if they are alcoholics or take other drugs, such as barbiturates.

Hamlet Gets Betsy's Bet

ROTTERDAM, Netherlands (WNS) — Betsy Perk, 9, wrote this drama review of the annual school play for the local press: "This year students performed 'Hamlet,' a play set in Denmark that was somehow written by an Englishman named William Shakespeare. It was very good even though some of the parents had seen it before."

High Noon's For Learning

WINNIPEG (CP) — The clock strikes noon and people pour into the street from the business offices of downtown Winnipeg. It's lunch hour for most of the businessmen, secretaries and clerks who work downtown, but for a few it's time for classes.

About 130 men and women have signed up for the University of Winnipeg's new program called University at Noon. Because the students haven't time to go to the classrooms at campus, the classrooms come to them.

She has been out of school for four years and hasn't taken a university course before. But she finds her introductory psychology course exciting.

"It's not a chore the way going to school used to be."

University at Noon courses are half credits, which means it takes two of them to equal one university course. A bachelor's degree usually required 15 credits.

Rooms in five downtown buildings become classrooms two to four days a week.

One of the students, Marie Laing, a 24-year-old secretary for Canadian Indemnity Co., said after one of her classes:

"When you do the same thing day after day in an office, you start to vegetate. This gives you something to think about. It turns your brain over a little."

Miss Laing said she wants to go to university full time in 1972. She didn't know whether she could work her half credit into her degree requirement, but she seemed unconcerned.

Her professor, Manly Spiegelman, said this attitude is typical of most of his students. "They're here for content, not for marks. That's what makes them so exciting to teach."

BOARD STIFF? TRY A GAME

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Adultery, mob violence, gangsterism, pollution, racial discrimination, polygamy, draft evasion, indecent exposure.

If any of these activities is your idea of an evening of fun you're in luck.

For all of them are now available in board games. As are games called "seduction," "group therapy," "body talk," "strip-tac-toe" and "bumps and grinds."

Which means you can now participate in your favorite iniquity with hardly any exertion and little danger of arrest.

The outbreak of reality and sociological significance in board games made it inevitable that someone would do what the changing times education service has just done — bring out a board game in which the players vicariously run for president.

Thoughout most of American history, the prospect of blowing an evening in a state of simulated candidacy would have plunged the average citizen into a fit of melancholia.

But, as changing times is fond of pointing out, times are changing.

The vast number of candidates currently engaged in the quest is indicative of the more tolerant attitude the public has adopted.

By contributing to public understanding about such delicate matters as what really happens during a caucus, "hat in the ring," the game about the nomination process will hasten the day when running for president will be socially acceptable.

Metis Spokesman Defends Chief's Buffalo Safari

VANCOUVER (CP) — Take the Indian viewpoint, says Joe Mercredi, and you find more than blood flows from a dying buffalo.

He was talking about Chief Dan George's buffalo, the big bull the actor brought down on a fall safari to the Northwest Territories.

Under the Mercredi formula, you mix and stir all the ingredients — the buffalo, the actor, the big-game outfitter — and you come up with a conspiracy to kindle a new spirit of pride in a bunch of Indian kids.

The dead buffalo, in these terms, is not a trophy but a sacrifice made for a generation growing up without heroes.

Indian pride in general, and Indians in prison in particular, are the over-riding concern of Mr. Mercredi.

This self-assured volunteer social worker on the Edmonton skid road, this part-time trumpet player with the jazzman's goatee, is also a Metis ex-convict who once hitchhiked from Edmonton to Ottawa wearing a ball and chain to dramatize what he called the law's oppression of the native people.

He talked about the past and his past while defending Chief George's trip to the buffalo ranges around Fort Smith, N.W.T.

Some people had the idea, he said, that Chief George was taken north to be exploited and it wasn't so.

He explained:

"In the Northwest Territories young native people are forced to attend schools in the larger communities and the native cultural living is being denied these people. There is no one in their own image that the young can look up to.

"By introducing Chief Dan George to the high schools in Fort Smith, it gave the native youth a chance to see a native who had made a name for himself in the public eye and they could look up to him as a model.

"To give the young children an ideal — this was the aim of Fort Smith."

Come-a-hunting invitations to Dan George, to Chief Albert Lightning of the Hobbema reserve in Alberta and to Joe Blyan, an Edmonton Metis leader, provided the first opportunity in a century for an Indian chief to kill a buffalo for his people.

Mr. Mercredi became involved in the arrangements because he had met Chief George in Saskatchewan when the actor, an Oscar nominee for his role in the movie Little Big Man, was working in a National Film Board production.

He passed along the invitation on behalf of the town of Fort Smith his home community and Frank Lavielette, a Chippewyan Indian whose outfitter's licence gives him the privilege of nurse-maiding well-heeled hunters in buffalo country.

Mr. Mercredi, 30, is head of the Canadian Fellowship Club, an agency of his founding which scouts jobs for people leaving prison and otherwise helps them to readjust to freedom.

He says people of Indian descent make up more than 70 per cent of the population of correctional institutions in Alberta. In Lethbridge jail, he says, the figure soars to 80 per cent.

Why is it that so many Indians land in jail?

To start with, Mr. Mercredi says, there is a basic lack of understanding of the workings of the law. Then there is another basic problem — shyness.

"Half of the native people don't understand what they are being charged with. It's easier to plead guilty than fight the case. A person becomes shy and cannot talk."

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

Here Comes the Bride, and All That Stuff

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

A minister friend of mine was recently asked to officiate, at the marriage of a young couple who, when he asked them about it, said that they had no church affiliations and did not plan to have any.

He asked them why they wanted a church wedding, expecting to get the usual line about the bride wanting to wear a long wedding gown and all the rest of the pretty ceremony bit. But they said simply, and honestly, that it would be inconvenient for them to be married on a day other than Saturday and that in their community there are no civil marriages on Saturdays.

He eventually convinced them that it would not be terribly inconvenient for them to be married on a Friday — and they cheerfully thanked him for his advice.

This points to a dilemma on which we clergy are caught. Should we officiate at weddings of persons who have no church affiliation and no real concern for the church? Should we go along with the idea that we have an obligation to provide every bride with a pretty wedding even though she and the groom and their families have no church involvement?

I can understand why so many people who do not care at all about the church wish to have church weddings. Civil marriages, where they can be arranged, are generally pretty chilly affairs, lacking in prettiness and charm, and sometimes deficient even in simple dignity.

Most ministers today seem inclined to give persons requesting church weddings the benefit of any doubts they may have. I estimate that in recent years nearly two-thirds of the weddings at which I have officiated have been for persons who have no active association with any church.

Perhpas we ministers are simply trying to maintain Good Guys images by being easy with respect to weddings.

And I have noticed that it is mainly at the weddings of persons with no church affiliations that we get the requests for revision of the marriage vows and for ornamenting the service with Kahil Gibran selections and sentimental poetry. A bride once asked me if I could "minimize the prayers," as she and her man simply didn't go for praying.

Cynics, of course, will point out that weddings are remunerative for the clergy. They really aren't all that remunerative — and many ministers now do no accept fees or honoraria.

I have so simple answers here, and, like most of my fellow ministers, I will continue to give couples wishing church weddings the benefit of my doubts. Sometimes I wish I could be tougher.

I heard recently about a bride who turned up for her wedding, a small one, with curlers in her hair. She said, "I want to look nice for the reception." There's a message in that somewhere.

Church and State Locked in Battle

NEW YORK (AP) — A quiet battle of nerves is going on between the United States government and American churches over their freedom to take positions on political and social issues.

In one case, the conflict already is in the courts.

It also was pointed up in a study by a group of Episcopal (Anglican) attorneys, saying the Internal Revenue Service seems to be taking a tougher approach to churches in an attempt to curb their activities on political-social matters.

"Although governmental surveillance and control of church activities is commonplace in some countries, it is virtually unprecedented in the United States," the study notes.

However, it says that in some recent instances, threats by government agents of a loss of tax exemption have frightened churches into dropping plans for certain programs.

'CHILLING EFFECT'

"It can have a chilling effect on certain of their actions," said John M. Evans a Manhattan lawyer and member of the Guild of St. Ives, an organization mainly of lawyers that made the study.

In at least one instance, it was learned, a Massachusetts church defied warnings of a possible loss of exemption and the revenue service is reported to have backed down.

But generally, the "churches are running scared," says Canon Walter D. Dennis, secretary of the guild. They're aware of the heavy cost of losing exemptions, and are thus hesitant to criticize IRS activity, lest it happen.

In one case, a U.S. district court in Oklahoma recently struck down an IRS action against an organization of conservative Evangelist Billy James Hargis, ruling that its activity is in harmony with its faith and ordering a tax refund.

The case is headed for the U.S. Supreme Court through a government appeal, and other church groups, some of which differ with aspects of Hargis' ministry, are considering joining in the case on his side.

The study notes that most major American churches maintain that participation in social-political affairs with moral implications is a religious responsibility, and they've done so extensively, previously without government interference.

Record Sales By CZ in '71

VANCOUVER (CP) — Stronger demand and prices for building materials in 1971 helped Crown Zellerbach Canada Ltd. post record sales and improved earnings over the previous year.

President Robert Rogers said Friday, however, he viewed 1971 as a period of only partial recovery for his company after the performance in 1970, when sales and earnings were severely depressed throughout the forest industry.

In an advance summary of 1971 results, he said the company's sales reached $206,409,000 in 1971, up seven per cent from $192,970,000 in 1970, while net income of $8,821,000 before an extraordinary charge was an increase of 36 per cent from $6.5 million.

"While sales were about $4 million higher than our previous record year in 1969, income still lagged far behind the levels acceptable in our highly capitalized industry," he said.

He noted earnings per share in 1971 equalled $1.11, before the extraordinary charge, compared with 82 cents in 1970.

"This was still much lower than the per share income of $1.78 in 1969, and our record earnings of $2.02 per share in 1964," said Rogers.

However, the company maintained its dividend of $1 per share on ordinary and class "A" shares in 1971.

The improvement in sales and income over 1970 reflected the higher level of home building in Canada and the United States, which has created strong demand and prices for the company's building materials, he said.

Over-all recovery was restricted, however, because of lower export demand for some products, including newsprint and pulp; virtual elimination of the premium on sales made in U.S. dollars; and extra distribution costs because of labor disputes in the United States.

Nfld. Grit Quits Giving Tories Edge

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — A Liberal member of the Newfoundland legislature announced Friday that he had resigned, giving the new Progressive Conservative government of Premier Frank Moores a slim voting majority in the house.

Augustus Oldford, elected as member for Fortune Bay in the provincial election last Oct. 28, said he had stepped down for personal reasons and wanted to return to his former post as a magistrate.

The vacancy gives the 21 Conservatives in the house a one-seat advantage over the two opposition parties. The Liberals, who formed the government up until four days ago, were reduced to 19 seats and the remaining seat is held by Tom Burgess, leader of the New Labrador Party.

With a PC member appointed Speaker and if Mr. Burgess voted with the Liberals, a vote in the house would be tied 20-20. However, the speaker is permitted to vote to break a tie.

Premier Moores was en route from St. John's to the west coast city of Corner Brook and was not available for comment.

Mr. Oldford said he was reluctant to enter politics in the first place, but he ran in the October election at the request of former premier Joseph Smallwood.

"I never wished to enter politics and now that the Conservatives have formed the government, I am most anxious to leave public life and return to the bench," he said.

The PCs were not sworn into office until Tuesday, more than three months after the election, because the final result was left in doubt by a dispute in the riding of St. Barbe South, where the accidental burning of about 100 ballots prevented completion of a recount.

Choice Not Acted On Says Former Chief

MONTREAL (CP) — Marcel St. Aubin, former Montreal police chief, said Friday the man he recommended as his successor last year was not appointed by the city's executive committee.

He testified at the opening of a Quebec Police Commission inquiry into the conduct of Montreal's present police chief, Jacques Saulnier, while he headed the police morality squad.

Contents of a confidential police report were published last week in Montreal Le Devoir. The report dealt with alleged irregularities by the morality squad and mentioned a $700 television set Chief Saulnier received from a hotel owner in December, 1966.

Mr. St. Aubin, police chief from January, 1970 to April, 1971, was questioned by the two commission members — judges Roger Gosselin and Ludovic Laperriere — on his choice of successor.

PREFERENCE STATED

He was asked if he had stated his preference to Mayor Jean Drapeau.

"Yes," he replied, "but only after I was asked."

"Was your recommendation acted upon?" Judge Laperriere asked.

"No," replied Mr. St. Aubin.

Another witness, Deputy Chief Rene Daigneault, said Chief Saulnier skipped four ranks when he was appointed. He went from inspector, jumping over assistant chief inspector, chief inspector, assistant chief and deputy chief.

Mr. Daigneault said Chief Saulnier's two immediate predecessors—Mr. St. Aubin and Jean-Paul Gilbert—had both worked their way through all ranks.

Mr. Daigneault also told the commission that a report on the alleged charges of misconduct against Mr. Saulnier had apparently disappeared.

He said he had ordered an investigation into the missing documents after the published story on the February, 1967, police report.

TV REPORTED

The report was quoted as saying that in 1966 Capt. Saulnier of the morality squad had accepted a $700 color television set from the owner of the LaSalle Hotel.

Mr. Daigneault said a check of dossiers in the disciplinary bureau's files revealed nothing and the only item appearing in the Chief Saulnier's file was an item listing a day off he received in 1950 after arresting a robbery suspect.

He told the commission that all he could find was a preliminary report on the alleged TV incident.

But, he added, "reports of that nature don't go into a police officer's file unless disciplinary action is taken."

On the promotions of previous chiefs, Mr. Daigneault said that former chief Gilbert worked his way through all the intermediary ranks. He was police chief from 1965 to 1969 and had a bachelor's degree and a master's degree in criminology.

His immediate successor, Mr. St. Aubin, worked his way up the ranks in the same way until he reached the top post in January, 1970. He retired because of ill health.

But Mr. Saulnier, brother of Lucien Saulnier, executive committee chairman of the Montreal Urban Community, was named chief directly from his post as inspector commanding Station 16.

Rebels May End Protest To Save Georgia Straight

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver's underground newspaper Georgia Straight, which has published since May, 1967, despite a continuous series of lawsuits, could perish this winter because of internal disorders.

Rebellious Straight employees demanding co-operative ownership of the paper published their own underground newspaper Friday, using The Straight's office and equipment.

Their 24-page edition of Georgia Grape hit the streets one day after the regular appearance of The Straight, which was put out by deposed owner and publisher Dan McLeod from a private house.

The Georgia Grape carried an article saying the staff had taken over because Mr. McLeod refused to share his 100-per-cent control of The Straight. On Nov. 19, staff members voted 21 to 8 in favor of collective control of The Straight. The occupation of The Straight office started early Wednesday.

An article in Thursday's Georgia Straight said Mr. McLeod "is in the process of obtaining a court order which will allow him to remove the equipment used to put out the paper. He did not want a physical confrontation which might have resulted in damage to office equipment."

Former Straight columnist Jeanine Mitchell said Friday night some members of the "collective" were having second thoughts about the original plan of taking over the Georgia Straight.

The 25-member collective was to meet today to decide whether to start their own paper and to hammer out policy.

Mr. McLeod said in Thursday's Georgia Straight that "if the collective wants to put out their own newspaper they can do so, but it can't be the Georgia Straight. There can only be one Georgia Straight."

Mr. McLeod said he did not give the ownership up to the staff "because I believe it is quite possible the paper will fail under collective ownership and this must not happen."

The Straight claims a circulation of 10,000.

Vancouver Contracting Firm Quits Over Labor Costs

VANCOUVER (CP) — Laing Construction and Equipment Ltd., one of the biggest contracting firms in British Columbia, announced Friday it is ceasing operations because of a "difficult" labor situation and a shortage of work.

The closure, to affect about 140 workers, is expected to take place by the end of September when the firm's current contracts are fulfilled.

Laing Construction, a subsidiary of John Laing and Son Ltd. of London, has been responsible for about $340 million in construction since setting up operations in Vancouver in 1954.

J. A. Pymont, the firm's chief executive and vice-chairman, said Laing Construction was "coming up against further wage negotiations which don't look promising."

The firm's current round of labor negotiations expire April 1.

"The labor situation is very difficult here, to say the least," Mr. Pymont said.

Mr. Pymont also said Britain's decision to join the European Economic Community has created better opportunities in that country than exist in Western Canada for the parent company.

"There are too many contractors chasing too little work," Mr. Pymont said. The pricing now is ridiculously low and the jobs just aren't economic."

Laing Construction recently completed a new hangar for Air Canada at Vancouver International Airport and now is finishing construction of a new medical building at the University of B.C., the second phase of a shopping centre, an administration services building at Simon Fraser University in suburban Burnaby and several small factories at an industrial development on Annacis Island.

The company's major local jobs in the past included large Vancouver buildings housing B.C. Hydro and Power Authority, MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. and the Vancouver YWCA, and the decking on the Port Mann bridge, spanning the Fraser River between Coquitlam and Surrey and the Second Narrows Bridge, linking Vancouver and North Vancouver.

Protests Fail

GEORGETOWN, Me. (AP) — The United States Navy began today its mock invasion of a stretch of Maine beach, a training exercise permitted only after a court skirmish with environmentalists.

As helicopters from a navy task force hovered over them, about 900 marines carrying snowshoes and battle packs hit the nearly snowless beach in 15-degree weather.

The four-day winter amphibious assault exercise, dubbed Operation Snowy Beach, came off only after conservationists' last-ditch efforts to block it failed.

Judge Edward T. Gignoux of the U.S. district court rejected Friday a petition for an injunction against the exercise. The environmentalists had claimed the operation would upset the ecology of Reid State Park.

The exercise, which involves 15,000 men, is designed to test equipment and train personnel in cold-weather operations.

Festival Ideas Welcome: Pollen

Mayor Peter Pollen said today any proposal to revive Victoria Fair will get an "enthusiastic reception" from him.

He was commenting on the announcement from the summer arts festival management Thursday that the fair has been cancelled for the coming summer for lack of financial support.

Perhaps word of the fair's passing is premature, said Pollen. What he understands is that the UVic professors who had a major role in presenting it say it's dead.

If the organizers wanted help, he would do everything he could see they got more of it. Certainly Victoria had not put much into it in the past,

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Please caution all of your new puppy owners to keep their puppy beds up off the floor away from drafts. — M. N.

COMMENT: Thank you. I will. Caution, though, for owners of short-legged puppies: Don't keep the bed TOO high off the floor — just high enough to keep cold from seeping through the bed bottom. A small air space or some insulating material will make a big difference.

DEAR DR. MILLER: At what age can you change the diet on a young puppy? R. D.

DEAR R. D.: If you are speaking of the original (but standardized) milk diet, ideally you can begin to supplement from two-and-a-half weeks on with human baby foods, even more cautiously, with puppy foods. A puppy at five or six weeks can — should be — on basically the best quality puppy foods. From this point on, if a switch in formula or brand occurs, it should be made gradually to avoid digestive upset. Frequent meals with smaller amounts at any one time also aid the youngster's digestion.

DEAR DR. MILLER: I am trying for the second year coming up now to breed Florence and Philbert, my lovebirds. They have always acted affectionately towards each other and given every indication that they would mate eventually. But last year it was a total flop. Not one egg. I went through all the preparations as advised by experts on these birds, gave them proper conditioning food for months in advance and gave them the right nest box which they seemed to enjoy but didn't put to the proper use. They seemed in excellent shape last year as now. What can you suggest to insure that they will be successful this year?

—T. M.

DEAR T. M.: Sorry, but I can't give you any particular basis for optimism here other than simply to try it again. Success means one thing to you but it may not mean the same to Florence and Philbert. Consider that one of them may be masquerading under false colors, anyway. This is easy for lovebirds. There is no sexual difference in the appearance of the birds.

TUNNELS BLOCKED by heavy snow and slides in the Fraser Canyon have halted all traffic on the Trans-Canada Highway, stranding hundreds of people in the canyon communities and motorists on their way through when the storm struck. The CP and CN rail lines have also been blocked.

Air Negotiators Agree to Terms

Walkouts Hit CBC Radio, TV

TORONTO — Technicians walked off the job at all but one of the CBC stations across Canada in a contract dispute today, but the public-owned corporation maintained daytime radio and television programming with use of management personnel.

While CBC officials were confident they could continue regular production of most radio and TV programs, the walkouts threatened cancellation of a telecast of tonight's National Hockey League game, a country-wide Saturday night feature for years.

Walkouts hit CBC radio and television stations from St. John's, Nfld., to Vancouver. The union, the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians, termed the walkouts study sessions and said they would last anywhere from five to 24 hours. They started in most areas about 9 a.m. local time.

If the walkouts continued tonight they would force the CBC to scrap telecasting of the NHL game in Montreal between the Canadiens and Boston Bruins. An alternative TV game New York Rangers at Vancouver — also would be knocked out.

NHL TELECAST

Cec Smith, assistant director of public relations for the CBC in Toronto, said officials would not know until about 6 p.m. EST tonight whether it would have to cancel the NHL telecast.

"If we can't get either of the games, it could be the first time in history that Canadians will be unable to watch a television game on Saturday night," Mr. Smith said. "We'll have to show a movie."

Mr. Smith said the technicians were off the job in all CBC stations with the exception of Ottawa, where union members who walked out Friday night returned to work this morning.

Mr. Smith said he did not know how many of the 2,710 technicians in the union were involved in today's walkouts.

"But it would not be many because we have a reduced staff on weekends when many programs are films or are taped in advance."

Meanwhile, the technicians were voting today whether to go on strike officially. The vote is expected to be counted by noon Monday. A strike was legal at 12:01 a.m. Friday.

NEWFOUNDLAND GRIT RESIGNS SEAT

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. — The sudden resignation of a Liberal member of the Newfoundland legislature has given the newly-formed Conservative government a tiny, but perhaps vital, edge. A former magistrate, Augustus Oldford, announced Friday he was leaving politics "for personal reasons" and that he wished to return to the bench.

As a result of the new vacancy, standings in the 42-seat house are as follows: Conservatives, 21; Liberals, 19, and New Labrador Party, 1. See story on Page 31.

Planted 'Bugs' FLQ Downfall

MONTREAL (CP) — The Star says "electronic eavesdroppers" played a major role last October in smashing of a Front de Liberation du Quebec cell planning to mark the first anniversary of the Quebec kidnap crisis with a series of political assassinations.

Attributing its information to a reliable police source, the newspaper says integrated circuit wireless transmitters planted in homes, offices and cars belonging to suspected terrorists and sympathizers enabled police to learn of plans to assassinate an undetermined number of politicians.

"All the details will eventually come out," the unnamed source is quoted as saying. "For the time being, let it suffice to say that extremely well-known politicians had been marked for assassination while others were to be kidnapped and held for ransom — and perhaps killed later.

"Part of our operations were reported in the press last October — unfortunately, because it interfered with our work at the time."

The Star's informant referred to published reports that the number of guards had been increased for cabinet ministers, amid other security measures.

The newspaper said its informant agreed with a published report Friday quoting Solicitor-General Jean-Pierre Goyer as saying the anniversary plans might have had consequences more serious than the 1970 kidnappings of British diplomat James Cross and Labor Minister Pierre Laporte and Mr. Laporte's subsequent murder.

The Star's source said the FLQ cell broken up last October included about 10 men and two women, all in their late teens and early 20s.

"We never did get enough evidence to charge any of them with attempted murder or attempted kidnapping — because those are usually tough charges to make stick in front of a jury."

Members Vote Tuesday

OTTAWA (CP)—Government and union negotiators agreed early this morning on a proposed settlement of the air traffic controllers' strike, but government announcement of the settlement's terms produced angry criticism from the union.

Michael Bolger, chief negotiator for the government, said the two sides agreed on a 27-month contract providing a 17-per-cent pay raise and reduction of the controllers' work week to 34½ hours from 36.

The terms represent substantial concessions by the union.

But the strike is to continue at least until Tuesday, when the controllers will vote on whether to ratify the settlement.

Union spokesman Richard Campbell issued a statement criticizing Mr. Bolger for releasing the terms of the proposed settlement before controllers across the country had been informed of it.

Mr. Campbell said Mr. Bolger's announcement was "irresponsible" and could prolong the strike.

Mr. Campbell also said the controllers would co-operate in providing any necessary emergency service to British Columbia, where road and rail transport have been crippled by snowstorms.

The 1,600 members of the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association went on strike six days ago, causing shutdown of regular air service across the country.

Mr. Campbell, association president, said the proposed settlement is mainly the result of union concessions, but the union bargaining team

Wall of Snow and Ice Cuts B.C. From Canada

VANCOUVER (CP) — A wall of ice and snow separated British Columbia from the rest of Canada today as wide areas of the province battled the aftermath of winter storms which knocked out power, communications and transportation.

Motorists stranded by snowslides were rescued by snowmobilers in some areas and hundreds of rail and bus passengers were halted at small communities by blockage of their routes.

Stores and schools were closed in some communities where residents went without heat, light or telephone while embattled work crews struggled to restore telephone and power lines knocked down by accumulations of ice.

Rail and highway traffic through the Rocky Mountains was halted, effectively sealing off the province already cut off by air because of a nation-wide strike by air traffic controllers.

Major road and rail routes blocked either by snowslides or massive traffic jams included the Rogers Pass and Crowsnest Pass highways through the Rockies, and the Fraser Canyon and Hope-Princeton highways linking Vancouver and the Lower Mainland with the interior.

Both Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways cancelled all eastbound departures from Vancouver and turned back westbound trains at Edmonton and Calgary.

Two westbound CNR passenger trains were stopped at Kamloops in the B.C. interior and their 700 passengers billeted in hotels and private homes in the area.

A westbound CPR passenger train was stranded for a time in the Fraser Canyon but, with a snowplow leading, had reached the tiny canyon community of Yale by Friday night.

All eastbound bus service from Vancouver was cancelled and four westbound Greyhound buses were forced to turn back to Princeton, 180 miles east of here, after being stranded on the route to Hope, 90 miles east of here.

A number of persons who had been stranded north of Hope were rescued Thursday by a snowmobile rescue crew preceded by a three-man party on snowshoes.

In the Fraser Canyon, 18 persons, including children, were rescued Friday from one of a series of tunnels on the mountainous stretch of road

SUN NOT STAYING

If anyone noticed that peculiar phenomenon shining on Victoria today, be assured it is a temporary condition.

The weatherman says the sun isn't going to shine any more, at least this weekend.

He's calling for mostly cloudy conditions with the occasional rain shower thrown in. Hopefully the showers won't be quite as intense as the long periods of rain which practically submerged Victoria the last few days.

Whatever the case, they'll be around tonight and Sunday.

Government Warns Insurance Firms

The provincial government will take a dim view of any attempts to get around its order for a $15 maximum premium for no-fault automobile insurance coverage effective March 1.

Dr. J. F. K. English, chairman of the B.C. Automobile Insurance Board, said Friday a letter to car insurance companies gives "some indication" that the board will consider "action" against such attempts.

The board issued the order Friday for a $15 maximum premium for the no-fault coverage nine days after a hearing at which insurance companies warned they would have to increase third-party liability premiums to offset

Oil Has Been Shipped for Years Down B.C. Coast From Alaska

VANCOUVER (CP) — Environmentalists concerned over the threat of pollution from a yet-to-be-decided American oil tanker route down the British Columbia coast have been given a new target.

It appears that an American marine towing company and at least one Vancouver firm have been moving oil in bulk by barge through coastal waters for years.

Mark Rose, New Democratic Party member of Parliament for Fraser Valley West, said Friday he had written to Environment Minister Jack Davis and Transport Minister Don Jamieson on the matter two months ago.

He said Mr. Jamieson had replied confirming the oil shipments by a Seattle firm, while Mr. Davis denied any such shipments.

Robert Roe, general manager of the Seattle-based United Transportation Co., confirmed in a telephone interview that his company had been moving barges between Alaska and Washington state "for years."

SHIPMENTS GO MONTHLY

He said there usually is about one shipment a month. The latest arrived in Seattle Friday night with a cargo of 70,000 barrels of oil.

He said the barges use the inside passage between Vancouver Island and the mainland occasionally take the ocean route to the west of the Island.

Mr. Roe also said that Canadian companies make the same type of shipments on the B.C. coast.

A spokesman for Gulf of Georgia Towing Co. in Vancouver confirmed that the firm periodically ships oil in bulk in barges to coastal points. He said the largest shipments carried are about 30,000 barrels.

Mr. Rose charged in an interview that the information he had received from Mr. Davis was "ridiculous," and that "it seems one ministry doesn't know what the other one is doing."

"Here we have the self-styled pollution fighter (Davis) from the West Coast who, when asked something of his own area, takes two months to come up with the wrong answer," he said.

The NDP member also said that Mr. Jamieson "is misleading the country in claiming there is nothing the government can do to prevent or regulate the shipments, especially if Canadian vessels are also involved."

INKY HEATH doubles over following attack by woman on left as Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home calmly looks on.

HURLED INK SMEARS HEATH

BRUSSELS (UPI)—A woman hit British Prime Minister Edward Heath with a bottle of ink today as he arrived to sign the European Common Market membership treaty.

As Heath walked up the marble staircase of the Egmont Palace, the woman threw a bottle of ink which splashed over his clothes and over the stairs. The woman herself was splashed with ink.

Heath left the building immediately to change his clothes, delaying the formal signing.

The woman, who gave her name as Miss Karen Cooper, 31, a psychologist and teacher of German nationality, was led away by Belgian police.

Apparently, she had obtained accreditation as a news correspondent to cover the signing ceremony and used this to gain entrance into the heavily guarded palace.

Before she was led away she handed out copies of a mimeographed statement protesting plans by the British government and the Greater London Council, the British capital's local parliament, to redevelop the area of the Covent Garden vegetable market in London.

Miss Cooper did not appear to be connected with a small group of anti-market protesters who demonstrated outside the palace before the signing ceremony.

Later, Heath returned and signed the treaty.

Building Materials 'Going Up and Up'

Victoria Times
SATURDAY, JAN. 22, 1972 25
SECOND SECTION

Costs of building materials have risen as much as 80 per cent in the last year, the Vancouver Island Building Supply Dealers' Association said today.

Local industry spokesmen blame high costs of operation and some shortages of lumber on the price increases. High labor costs are another factor.

Bob Weeks, manager of Doman Industries Ltd., said building supplies are "a rising market now" and that costs "just keep going up and up."

NO RELIEF

"Everything is on the move up," Weeks said, and no relief from the high prices is in sight.

He said a percentage increase of 50 or 60 per cent would be a conservative one to estimate the escalation of costs.

Weeks said the effect of the higher prices is more startling now because prices in the industry were very low for a number of years.

"It's the sharp increase that hurts," he said.

The supply dealers' association statement quoted prices for such items as utility 2x4, used extensively in apartment framing, as increasing 80 per cent in the last 12 months. Also mentioned was a 39 per cent increase in the prices for 2x10s in the same period.

"Fir ply has gone up twice in the last six weeks, making a total increase in the past 12 months in excess of 20 per cent for many popular fir ply items," the statement released by secretary C. C. Warren said.

"These major increases for lumber and plywood were inevitable in view of the depressed and unprofitable giveaway prices that were in effect last winter.

"In addition to the price rise, many shortages have developed in lumber and plywood, with delivery delays of two to three months not uncommon."

Other items the association listed as escalating are Gyproc board, fiberglass insulation, asphalt roofing, insulating wall sheathing, particle board, sewer pipe, steel garage doors, glass and ceramic tile.

MORE COMING?

Contract negotiations between labor and management in the building industry are due to start soon, and may signal yet another increase in the costs of materials.

Eighteen unions in B.C. will be seeking shorter working hours and increased fringe benefits with their new contracts.

Negotiating will be the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council and the Construction Labor Relations Association, bargain agent for management.

Current contracts involving more than 50,000 workers expire March 31.

NEY
. . . part-time director

Children's Clinic Head Named

Dr. Phillip Ney will be the part-time director of a new psychiatric unit for children to be opened on the sixth floor of the Eric Martin Institute.

Agreement on how the long-delayed unit will be directed and financed has been reached between the provincial government and Royal Jubilee Hospital, Dr. A. C. Pickles, the hospital's executive director, said Friday.

Initially the unit, only the second one in the province, will have beds for 10 patients but ultimately 20 beds are planned. Hopefully it can be in operation by the early summer, said Pickles, although a number of steps remain.

Under the agreement, Ney, a child psychiatrist, will be responsible for designing the over-all treatment program, staff training and liaison with other agencies involved in child care. The director's job is expected to occupy about half his time.

In addition psychiatrists will be able to participate in care of patients and family doctors will be an integral part of the unit, said Pickles.

Opening of the unit will depend on provincial approval of a staffing budget, completion of some structural modifications, furnishing and equipping it, he added.

The unit for children had been planned since the psychiatric institute opened two years ago. It was delayed while doctors and hospital argued a clinical director was essential and the province balked at paying both a director and doctors on a fee-for-service basis.

UVic's New Head Looks at Issues

On Feb. 1, the University of Victoria gets a new president, a man who hopes to calm the waters of unrest after several years of disruption and uncertainty on the Gordon Head campus.

From all indications, Hugh Farquhar seems eminently qualified for the job. He has been around UVic, in its various stages, for most of the last 40 years.

He has been a student, junior and senior faculty member, dean, and now president. Or he will be when he takes over from outgoing president Bruce Partridge.

Already Dr. Farquhar has set the wheels turning for a new look for UVic. Two commissions have been set up, aimed at producing reports within six months. They will study university governance and academic development.

Another group is at work on the university's controversial tenure document, cause of much of UVic's problems between faculty, students and administration.

'. . . feeling of confidence'

Farquhar, 61, has most recently been dean pro tem of the faculty of education, a position with which the university lured him out of semi-retirement last year.

He was educated at Victoria Normal School and Victoria College and taught at both institutions. He was director of UVic's summer session for 12 years and has served as executive assistant to the university's top administrator.

Farquhar says he is not looking much beyond June 30 as far as his tenure in the job is concerned. For his opinions on university problems between now and then, Times education reporter Brian Butters obtained the following interview.

Times: What do you consider to be the main problem facing the university at this time, and what do you propose to do about it?

Farquhar: I think it's difficult to comment on this with particular respect to our university. I think all universities have some major problems today, one of which of course is scarce resources and one of which is some lack of confidence on the public's part. I think the public is questioning universities as never before, and I think universities are going to have to be responsible and accountable to society for what they do.

One of the problems is to try to restore a feeling of confidence with the public, with society. That is one of the major things. I think the universities have to determine just what it is society expects of them. I think they have to reassess constantly what they're doing, they have to examine their programs, examine their goals, because after all, they are dependent upon society for their very existence.

I think universities have to consider the needs of young people today. If they're going to take young people into the university for four or five years, they have to give some thought to what the young people are going to have when they come out, whether there is going to be a place in society for them or not. I believe very strongly that universities exist for students, and I think perhaps we have to remind ourselves of this from time to time.

Times: Tenure, and the quest for it by faculty members, has been the cause of much of UVic's troubles over the last few years, from Tarlton-Schwartz to Goede-Graff-and-Jain. In fact, it can probably be fairly said that tenure has caused the downfall of two UVic presidents, Malcolm Taylor and Bruce Partridge. What is your opinion on the issue of tenure, from the point of view of a university president and from the point of view of an academic?

Farquhar: This is one of the areas I'm very conscious of and is a particularly complex problem. We have a committee which is presently studying the whole concept of tenure; we have a tenure document we've worked on for some years which is proving to be not entirely satisfactory. I've suggested that the committee should make a fresh start and study the whole concept of tenure, what tenure means, why we have it, what we want it to do, instead of trying to patch an unsatisfactory document.

I think the main issue is one of academic freedom. This is the basic thing and this is the thing that all university people seek to guard jealously.

The right to teach, the right to do research, the right to express their opinion in those areas in which they are recognized experts. They have to be able to do this in an atmosphere where they have a sense of security.

Therefore we have to create some mechanism whereby people can feel secure, so they can carry out their academic studies without fear of punishment of any kind, some form of security.

Now there might be other ways of getting this security; tenure may be only one. This is one of the things I hope is going to be studied, what other approaches might there be rather than the concept of tenure.

Tenure is really just a term of employment. It's not necessarily an automatic thing and shouldn't be thought of as such. It's not something that should be awarded lightly because given tenure a person is virtually secure for life under the present system.

Times: What do you think the role of a university president should be these days: a peacemaker between rival factions on campus, an innovator, a co-ordinator, any of these things . . .?

Farquhar: In the first place, I would hope that there wouldn't be rival factions on campus. I feel we should all be contributing towards a common purpose. Now we're not all going to agree and we can be critical of one another, but there's a way of being constructively critical too and still working towards a common end.

However, I have indicated that I feel an administrator, and the president is of course an administrator, has the job of providing the resources, the buildings, equipment, finance, so that the faculty may conduct their teaching and research. I think the job is to establish a climate in which academic activities may proceed. I think a president should provide leadership and encouragement. I'm not sure that he should be an innovator but he should encourage innovation, innovation which should come from others, from the faculty.

I think he should be everything that he can to enable faculty to make an optimum contribution.

Times: Do you look upon yourself as merely a caretaker in this job or would you consider taking the job on an indefinite basis if it were offere to you?

Farquhar: If I were only here for six months, I would not consider myself a caretaker, or a man just filling the gap. Absolutely not. I think if we proceed that way, we could go on forever. Presidents come and go. We've got a history of this and if we considereed each person to be here for a year or two, not to do anything until someone else comes along, we'd do nothing.

So if I were only to be here for six months, I would still feel it to be my responsibility to take some definite action to see that the university moves ahead. That's the answer to that question. As far as how long I'm going to be here is concerned, I haven't got my crystal ball, I have no idea. I will conduct myself as if I were going to be here. It may be six months, it may be a year, it may be a year and six months. I don't know. This will not affect the way I operate.

'. . . Make a fresh start'

Times: Could if be longer than a year and six months? Would you like to to be longer?

Farquhar: I think this is too difficult to say. I have made no commitments. I agreed that I would come in. If in the opinion of the board of governors, they felt I could be of help, then I would accept the position. I don't seek it. I see it as a challenge. If I reach the point where I feel I am not making a contribution or not making progress, I won't waste much time around here. I am personally not thinking in terms of a long period of time.

Times: There seems to have been a considerable lack of trust on the campus since the various contract and tenure disputes came up. What do you propose to do to get people to trust you as the president of the university?

Farquhar: First of all I stand on my reputation. I've been in this community in education for many years and I think I have established a reputation for being trustworthy. At my age, I'm not likely to change in this respect. I've worked with many people on this campus and I know that many people have confidence in me and do trust me. Now I have to demonstrate to the university community that I can be trusted.

Times: You have expressed a reluctance to reopen the cases of Goede, Graff and Jain. Any particular reasons for feeling this way?

Farquhar: I'm not sure that it is a reluctance. The whole thing was dealt with before I was here. It was dealt with by the board and the commission's findings. I believe the board has accepted this. I don't think that I am in a position to even talk about it unless the board of governors difected me to. My understanding is that there is an appeal in the hands of the visitor and as long as an appeal rests there, I think it would be entirely out of order for me to discuss it.

Times: On the issue of the academic vice-president which UVic doesn't have, how much longer do you think the university can function properly without this role being filled?

Farquhar: As you understand, I am still not in the president's seat, so there are certain things that I can't do. I hope that there will be some kind of appointment made in the academic area within the very near future.

'. . . with a clean slate'

Times: Are you talking about somebody on a pro tem basis, for example?

Farquhar: You will recall that the board of governors has asked that no external appointments be made in top administrative position for the present. This is a policy. Therefore, if there is an appointment made at this time, it probably would be an internal appointment. It is possible that such an appointment would be an acting or pro tem appointment.

Times: Is there a search going on right now for a permanent person for this position?

Farquhar: For a permanent person, no there isn't.

Clubhouse Plan Dead for Now

Saanich will have to abandon, at least for the foreseeable future, its plans for a proper clubhouse at the municipally-owned Cedar Hill golf course.

The prediction Friday from Ald. William Noel, chairman of the golf course management committee, came after the committee studied tenders for a 32-foot extension to the present clubhouse and pro shop, at the end of Derby Road on the east side of the course.

Noel said because the tenders were higher than had been expected, "it will be quite some time before we can have a clubhouse per se."

The original plan had been to make the present building solely a pro shop, when a separate clubhouse was feasible, but Noel said the combined "makeshift" facilities will have to continue.

Three bids for the extension project were received, and the committee decided to recommend that the contract go to the low bidder, H. E. Fowler and Sons Ltd., at $40,985.

Arnold Constrauction bid $41,000 and Noble and McLeod Ltd. $44,249.

Noel said 75 per cent of the on-site labor costs, or about $15,000, will be recovered under the capital works aspect of the federal government's employment incentive program.

The extension will be used for additional dining and liquor storage facilities.

NEW STATEMENT ON PARTRIDGE

University of Victoria board of governors chairman Lloyd McKenzie said today he plans to convene a special meeting of the board to prepare a statement clarifying the circumstances of Bruce Partridge's departure from the university.

McKenzie said the board will likely meet Monday to prepare a "more comprehensive" statement than those which have been made on the terms of Partridge's terminal settlement and the circumstances of his resignation.

Partridge announced his resignation Nov. 16.

McKenzie declined to comment further on the situation, which has seen the board of governors criticized for setting on a figure which has been reported as high as $80,000 for Partridge. It was said at the time the settlement was compensation in lieu of future expectations.

McKenzie had said the settlement figure was "a deceptive one," in that it contained pension benefits Partridge accured while at UVic.

Asked at the time if $80,000 was a "realistic" figure for the settlement, McKenzie had said it was.

New Liquor Store To Be Self Service

The Capital Region's third self-service government liquor store will be opening in about two weeks, liquor commissioner William Bruce said Friday.

The 7,000-square-foot outlet will be in Nootka Place, a renovated building adjoining the existing Humboldt Street liquor store, which will close.

Two other self-serve stores are at Fort and Foul Bay shopping centre and in Sidney.

Bruce said the new store would be about the same over-all size as the closing store, but much more convenient and comfortable, decorated in B.C. woods.

CRASH KILLS MAN BUT SON UNHURT

A Sidney man was killed Friday night but his son in the car with him escaped unhurt when the auto struck two traffic islands on the Pat Bay Highway at McTavish Road.

Ronald William Higgins, 35, of 2054 Ardwell Drive was pronounced dead on arrival at Rest Haven Hospital in Sidney.

The RCMP said Higgins' son, Curtis Brendon Higgins, 9, was not hurt in the accident which occurred shortly after 9 p.m.

Police said the driver was northbound on the highway and it was raining. The car rolled on to its roof after hitting the islands and skidded about 75 feet.

Deputy Coroner G. A. Gerrie will conduct an inquiry, police said.

Ad Ban Case Quashed

The first court case involving the province's liquor advertising ban to reach a conclusion ended in Victoria Friday when the judge quashed the charge on a technicality.

Provincial court Judge E. F. N. Robinson did so after prosecutor Peter Birkett agreed with an earlier defence counsel argument that the question of distribution involved in the charge meant more than the distribution of a single item.

The charge had been laid in December by Vancouver resident David Bader, one of several court moves he has made to test the validity of the controversial liquor-tobacco ad ban introduced by the government last year.

In the case before Robinson, Mrs. Violet Holden, a sighted employee at the Canadian National Institute for the Blind newsstand beside the Legislative Buildings, was charged with unlawfully distributing a Time magazine containing liquor advertising.

Her lawyer, Cecil Branson, had argued last week that distributing meant more than one article to more than one person. Birkett said Friday the Crown had looked into court precedents on the question of distribution and Branson "appears to have made a valid point."

Several publishers challenging the consitutionality of the ban have an action before the B.C. Supreme Court. Still to be heard as well are two other charges laid in Nanaimo by Bader and involving B.C. Ferries manager Monty Aldous and two ferry newsstand operators.

Needed Here: An Affair of the Heart

THIS WEEK I VISITED with a useful, active man who spent more than half of 1971 on the edge of a precipice. Not literally, of course. But looking back on his half-year in the shadow of sudden death, that's how he chooses to describe the experience.

It began when his heart served notice on him with an attack that made him an instant candidate for Royal Jubilee Hospital's coronary ward. He survived to enter on the shadowed life of those who wait in the knowledge that the next slugging may prove fatal.

He had a deeply-worried wife and a couple of apprehensive children, a house with a sizeable mortgage on it, and a job at which he could no longer work.

Eventually, he would cross to Vancouver for the open heart operation that could restore him to normal living. But his name was down near the bottom of the elective surgery list, and the sludge-narrowed artery that helped fuel his pump wasn't going to unplug itself.

So he waited, hoping for the best but prepared for the worst, until his name came up. Then he and his wife crossed to Vancouver — he to go into hospital, she to spend two lonely, costly, weeks in a city where she had neither relatives nor friends.

The man I listened to was among the lucky. For one thing, his condition wasn't listed as acute, although it could have become so at any time during those months of waiting for the surgery that Victoria can't yet provide.

His financial resources, though badly strained, tided him and his family over the rough time. He didn't have to take on debts that would be years in the paying, or seek welfare, and his job was there when he was ready to resume it.

By no means every candidate for open heart surgery at Vancouver General Hospital or St. Paul's — the only two in this province able to provide it — is as fortunate as he.

Families have been ruined by that outrageously long delay. Fathers used to pulling their weight have become so guilt-ridden over months of enforced illeness that they lapse into a state of complete silence.

The fault doesn't rest with the two Vancouver hospitals. As one doctor puts it, they are coping brilliantly with the impossible. They handled upwards of 300 open heart operations last year. About 100 of these were on Vancouver Islanders.

Sixty of those on the list today reside in Greater Victoria.

For the non-acute cases in need of surgery, waiting time is now a horrific eight months.

I'm not being entirely unselfish when I suggest this isn't good enough. After all, life being a chancy business, I could find myself on that list. So could you.

Victoria — and Royal Jubilee Hospital to be specific — has an operating theatre planned with heart surgery among its uses when the West and Royal wings were built. Since the heart-lung machine and the heart-saving by-pass operation hadn't then been developed, the planners showed commendable forethought.

I learn from Royal Jubilee spokesmen that this operating room could be renovated, wired and set up for open-heart surgery at a cost of $25,000.

It could be equipped for something between $65,000 and $70,000. Equipment would include a $21,000 medical marvel which in outline looks rather like an old fashioned dresser with stand-up mirror frame attached. This is the heart-lung machine, which takes over from these organs the job of oxygenating and circulating the patient's blood.

The heart is by-passed: repairs, which may include the grafting of a pipeline to take over from the clogged artery section, are carried out.

That's a vast over-simplification of highly specialized procedures that occupy a team of surgeons, technical staff and nurses for several hours.

We have much more than the nucleus of a heart team available in Victoria. What's lacking is the money which would permit such a team to salvage badly-damaged hearts at a yearly operating cost of about $137,000.

That sum, plus the capital costs I've listed, is not precisely peanuts. Local Kiwanians who have given sturdy help before in matters of the heart, hope to raise $14,000 toward the heart-lung machine itself. Our British Columbia government would then chip in the remaining $7,000.

But that's no more than a bit from the over-all funding needed.

And when will that be available? When will the Vancouver Islander in need of cardiovascular repairs be able to check in at Royal Jubilee for a renewed lease on life?

Over-simplifying again, I suggest it will materialize when Premier Bennett's government springs the funds required. Until then, try to be of good heart. Because if you're not, your name might be added to that long, long Vancouver list.

TWIN ESKIMO GIRLS Sharun and Shirley Virth from Unavik were among the 51 Canadian athletes who left from CFB Comox today for the Winter Olympics in Sapporo, Japan. The team left from the base after the armed forces stepped into the hole left by the air controllers' strike which put commercial airports out of action. London Bobby Patrols City Streets in May

A London Bobby in blue serge, helmet and chinstrap will patrol Victoria streets for a week in May as part of British Shopping Week.

The Bobby, helpful symbol of Britain to millions of tourists in the U.K., will remind oldtimers in Victoria of the helmet and uniform worn over 25 years ago by city policemen.

Local police are willing to act as hosts to their Metropolitan Police Department opposite, but they draw the line there. City police rejected a request that they wear their old uniforms during British Shopping Week.

The event is sponsored by Victoria Chamber of Commerce, Downtown Business Association and the U.K. department of trade and industry in connection with the second annual Victoria Days celebration, May 22-27.

One of the organizers asked police to restore their livery to lend atmosphere downtown. Instead, police offered to take the Bobby on point and beat duty, and be friendly toward natives and visitors.

Bobby — his name has not yet reached the British trade office in Vancouver — has had special training in public relations and will take the opportunity to explain how his department works and some of its problems.

Victoria police commission has agreed to underwrite $10 a day out-of-pocket expenses and the British Week committee will pay his board and fare.

Efforts failed to have a Royal Navy aircraft carrier or other warship visit the port at the same time.

But the trade office is sending one of its special promotion kits to help ballyhoo the week. It has among its items:

A six-foot model of Concorde supersonic airliner; bagpipes and Scottish regalia; 12 historical costumes; a large sculptured lion and unicorn; suits of armor; bales of bunting and Union Jacks; cardboard cutouts of Bobbies and Coldstream Guards; arrangements for artisans of many talents for demonstrations in Victoria shops.

The latter may include a leather craftsman, silversmith, glassblower, weaver, blacksmith, potter and stained glass glazier.

For its part, the Empress plans to engage for that week an English barmaid and a cook specializing in such wholesome delicacies as pork pie.

. . . SNOW AND ICE

after they were trapped by slides up to 50 feet deep.

Hardest hit by the storms was the southwestern part of the province consisting of the Lower Mainland and Fraser Valley.

Although many areas which had been without power since Thursday regained service Friday, the province still faced a critical power shortage due to breaks in major transmission lines.

Power supply to the lower mainland and Vancouver Island remains serious.

B.C. Hydro is serving southwestern B.C. largely with power borrowed from United States utilities.

Residential customers can help protect the power supply by turning off unnecessary lights and appliances and commercial customers also are asked to curtail unnecessary power use, particularly neon and other illuminated signs.

Hydro engineers believe they have established where breaks occurred on both of the 500,000-volt transmission lines which feed Peace River power to the lower mainland.

Extensive damage to the No. 1 Peace River line in the area east of Agassiz is expected to keep that line out of service for some time.

Location of damage to the No. 2 Peace River circuit has been narrowed down to a section in the Stawamus River Valley, eight to 10 miles southeast of Squamish.

A patrol is on its way in and engineers hope to fly over the area by copter later today.

Nearer to Vancouver, in the Lower Mainland, 150 linemen worked to repair four steel transmission towers collapsed under the weight of ice just east of Agassiz.

In Chilliwack, about 30 miles east of here, radio station CHWK returned to the air with reduced wattage after having suspended broadcasts to lend its emergency power generator to a senior citizens' home.

Many businesses in Chilliwack were closed while others were busy selling camp stoves, flashlights and candles.

Storm conditions appeared to be abating in the affected areas Friday night with rain forecast for coastal regions and snow flurries for the interior.

. . . AIR STRIKE

will unanimously recommend it to the controllers.

He said a factor weighing heavily on the negotiators was knowledge that the government could at any time seek legislation taking the right to strike away from the controllers.

MILLIONS LOST

The strike, which has prevented virtually all commercial aircraft from using Canadian airports, is costing commercial carriers between $2 million and $3 million a day.

More than 14,000 Air Canada employees have been laid off without pay during the walkout.

Treasury Board President C. M. Drury issued a statement welcoming the proposed settlement and paying tribute to the "expertise, patience and persistence" of mediator Noel Hall, who he said was a major factor in the settlement.

Mr. Drury also commended the efforts made by both sides to reach a settlement.

Announcement of the agreement was made at 6 a.m. EST by mediator Noel Hall as he emerged from his second all night bargaining session in a row.

Dr. Hall told reporters the strike "is essentially solved if the agreement is ratified by the rank and file."

The mediation process, he said, had been "the most difficult one I've ever seen."

BARGAINING 'VIABLE'

Still, it had proved that collective bargaining in the public service was viable if both government and union negotiators "can be encouraged and persuaded and sometimes shoved into a decision-making mood."

He declined to say what effect on the talks was made by the announcement Thursday by Prime Minister Trudeau that the cabinet was not yet ready to recall Parliament and seek back-to-work legislation.

He admitted however that earlier this week the talks had come to a pause to enable the negotiators to "see what would happen" at the weekly cabinet meeting Thursday.

Bolger said the settlement supported Mr. Trudeau's contention that it would have been irresponsible to strip the controllers of the right to strike as soon as they tried to use it.

The key problem now, he said, is to "rebuild and reinforce the relations we had with the controllers before the strike."

LABOR TROUBLE STAYS

Whatever the results of the controllers' vote Tuesday, the nation's airports will still not be free of labor difficulties.

Remaining on the boil is a dispute involving more than 600 electronic technicians who service and monitor radar, navigational and communications equipment in the control towers.

Together with the rest of the 2,200-member local of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the technicians staged a 24-hour protest strike Tuesday. A full scale strike is scheduled for the first week of February.

The technicians, seeking to reduce the salary gap between themselves and the controllers, initially demanded a 50-per-cent wage increase in salaries to $15,000 a year.

Since then the group has rejected a conciliation report recommendation for a 15-per cent raise to $11,500 in a 28-month contract.

The top-rated operating controllers now earn a maximum of $14,500 a year, with supervisors receiving up to $18,000. The average salary for all, including training controllers, is reckoned by the union to be $9,135.

AHEAD 60 PER CENT

The controllers had sought a 60-per-cent raise to draw them abreast of top-paid control tower workers in the United States. More moderate was the 22 per cent raise recommended by the union representative on the conciliation board.

. . . CAR INSURANCE

reductions in no-fault insurance. Current no-fault premiums are $20 to $22.

"We'll look after that," English said Friday adding that the board has suggested the insurers give "some study" to their positions on the matter.

Bill Hartley (NDP—Yale Lillooet) said the rate reduction was "far too little" and criticized the board's failure to order refunds on past overcharges.

He said the reduction to $15 still allows insurance companies to claim 40 per cent of the premium dollar for administration expenses. Yet one insurance company at the hearing said expenses of 18 per cent were adequate "so the premium should be rolled back to at least $12 a year."

Hartley, the NDP car insurance critic, said the reduction was also based on a year when premium revenue was smaller than normal because the motorists weren't charged for no-fault coverage until their policies came up for renewal. The coverage became compulsory Jan. 1, 1970.

Most insurance companies said at the hearing that the $20 to $22 rate currently being charged for no-fault insurance was justified despite the fact that claims under the coverage fell short of expectation.

Industry spokesmen said many persons were still collecting damages for death and injury under third-party liability insurance rather than under no-fault.

As a result, third party liability claims would have to rise to offset any reduction on no-fault, they said.

"We weren't convinced of that," English said Friday, confirming that the board has power to regulate all car insurance rates.

The hearing last week resulted from a board request in December for a maximum $14 no-fault premium.

The announcement Friday said the increase in the maximum rate of $15 takes account of the likelihood that additional claims will be made under the no-fault section in future.

The board took action after the Canadian Underwriters Association in early December announced average increases of 5.9 per cent in private passenger car insurance premiums but including no change in the $20 to $22 no-fault rates.

Cyclist's Inquest Monday

An inquest into the death of cyclist Michael Holland, 16, will open at 7:30 p.m. Monday at Chaplin's funeral chapel, 1155 Fort, deputy coroner Gerald Gerrie announced Friday.

The boy was killed Thursday evening when his bicycle was in collision with a car at Cook and Balmoral in Victoria.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Holland of 1256 Rudlin, Michael was well-known for his participation in minor hockey and other sports locally as well as activities with the Boy's Club.

He had played for the past nine years in the Victoria Minor Hockey Association, this year in the Midget House League. He had also played baseball in the Carnarvon House League and was a soccer and basketball player for the Boys' Club as well.

He had served as counsellor for the Boys' Club at their Camp Kalitan.

His funeral will be at Chaplin's Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.

the weather

Southwestern British Columbia and the extreme southern section of the province remained mild overnight but Arctic air maintained its grip on all other areas. Snow was fairly general in the cold air but ended in the Revelstoke and Blue River districts around midnight. The latter station recorded 11 inches of snow during the six-hour period ending at 10 p.m. The south coast was cloudy and mild with rainshowers.

Little change is forecast in the position of the Arctic front during the next 48 hours. Early this morning the system extended from north of Cranbrook, Castlegar and Kelowna to just south of Lytton to Alta Lake thence west northwestward. There will be periods of snow north of this line but accumulations will be fairly light. There is still a slight chance of freezing rain just north of the Arctic front. Rainshowers will continue over the south coast.

Plane Takes Barge After Island Crash

ALERT BAY, B.C. (CP) — A float-equipped plane that flipped on landing in the harbor of this Cormorant Island community Thursday was being taken to Vancouver Friday night by barge.

The plane, a Cessna owned by Harrison Airways, was en route to Vancouver from Port Hardy, when it overturned in a sudden gust of wind on landing here for fuel.

The pilot, Thomas James Coulter, 26, and his only passenger, William Edgar MacDonald, both of Vancouver, escaped uninjured and were picked up by a nearby tugboat. The plane was lifted from the water by a barge with a derrick.

Air Negotiators Agree to Terms

Walkouts Hit CBC Radio, TV

TORONTO (CP) — Technicians walked off the job at all but one of the CBC stations across Canada in a contract dispute today, but the public - owned corporation maintained daytime radio and television programming with use of management personnel.

While CBC officials were confident they could continue regular production of most radio and TV programs, the walkouts threatened cancellation of a telecast of tonight's National Hockey League game, a country-wide Saturday night feature for years.

Walkouts hit CBC radio and television stations from St. John's, Nfld., to Vancouver. The union, the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians, termed the walkouts study sessions and said they would last anywhere from five to 24 hours. They started in most areas about 9 a.m. local time.

If the walkouts continued tonight they would force the CBC to scrap telecasting of the NHL game in Montreal between the Canadiens and Boston Bruins. An alternative TV game—New York Rangers at Vancouver— also would be knocked out.

NHL TELECAST

Cec Smith, assistant director of public relations for the CBC in Toronto, said officials would not know until about 6 p.m. EST tonight whether it would have to cancel the NHL telecast.

"If we can't get either of the games, it could be the first time in history that Canadians will be unable to watch a television game on Saturday night," Mr. Smith said. "We'll have to show a movie."

Mr. Smith said the technicians were off the job in all CBC stations with the exception of Ottawa, where union members who walked out Friday night returned to work this morning.

Mr. Smith said he did not know how many of the 2,110 technicians in the union were involved in today's walkouts.

"But it would not be many because we have a reduced staff on weekends when many programs are films or are taped in advance."

Meanwhile, the technicians were voting today whether to go on strike officially. The vote is expected to be counted by noon Monday. A strike was legal at 12:01 a.m. Friday.

NEWFOUNDLAND GRIT RESIGNS SEAT

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. — The sudden resignation of a Liberal member of the Newfoundland legislature has given the newly-formed Conservative government a tiny, but perhaps vital, edge. A former magistrate, Augustus Oldford, announced Friday he was leaving politics "for personal reasons" and that he wished to return to the bench.

As a result of the new vacancy, standings in the 42-seat house are as follows: Conservatives, 21; Liberals, 19, and New Labrador Party, 1. See story on Page 31.

Members Vote Tuesday

OTTAWA (CP)—Government and union negotiators agreed early this morning on a proposed settlement of the air traffic controllers' strike, but government announcement of the settlement's terms produced angry criticism from the union.

Michael Bolger, chief negotiator for the government, said the two sides agreed on a 27-month contract providing a 17-per-cent pay raise and reduction of the controllers' work week to 34½ hours from 36.

The terms represent substantial concessions by the union.

But the strike is to continue at least until Tuesday, when the controllers will vote on whether to ratify the settlement.

Union spokesman Richard Campbell issued a statement criticizing Mr. Bolger for releasing the terms of the proposed settlement before controllers across the country had been informed of it.

Mr. Campbell said Mr. Bolger's announcement was "irresponsible" and could prolong the strike.

Mr. Campbell also said the controllers would co-operate in providing any necessary emergency service to British Columbia, where road and rail transport have been crippled by snowstorms.

The 1,600 members of the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association went on strike six days ago, causing shutdown of regular air service across the country.

Mr. Campbell, association president, said the proposed settlement is mainly the result of union concessions, but the union bargaining team

Planted 'Bugs' FLQ Downfall

MONTREAL (CP) — The Star says "electronic eavesdroppers" played a major role last October in smashing of a Front de Liberation du Quebec cell planning to mark the first anniversary of the Quebec kidnap crisis with a series of political assassinations.

Attributing its information to a reliable police source, the newspaper says integrated circuit wireless transmitters planted in homes, offices and cars belonging to suspected terrorists and sympathizers enabled police to learn of plans to assassinate an undetermined number of politicians.

"All the details will eventually come out," the unnamed source is quoted as saying. "For the time being, let it suffice to say that extremely well-known politicians had been marked for assassination while others were to be kidnapped and held for ransom — and perhaps killed later.

"Part of our operations were reported in the press last October — unfortunately, because it interfered with our work at the time."

The Star's informant referred to published reports that the number of guards had been increased for cabinet ministers, amid other security measures.

The newspaper said its informant agreed with a published report Friday quoting Solicitor-General Jean-Pierre Goyer as saying the anniversary plans might have had consequences more serious than the 1970 kidnappings of British diplomat James Cross and Labor Minister Pierre Laporte and Mr. Laporte's subsequent murder.

The Star's source said the FLQ cell broken up last October included about 10 men and two women, all in their late teens and early 20s.

"We never did get enough evidence to charge any of them with attempted murder or attempted kidnapping — because those are usually tough charges to make stick in front of a jury."

Wall of Snow and Ice Cuts B.C. From Canada

VANCOUVER (CP) — A wall of ice and snow separated British Columbia from the rest of Canada today as wide areas of the province battled the aftermath of winter storms which knocked out power, communications and transportation.

Motorists stranded by snowslides were rescued by snowmobilers in some areas and hundreds of rail and bus passengers were halted at small communities by blockage of their routes.

Stores and schools were closed in some communities where residents went without heat, light or telephone while embattled work crews struggled to restore telephone and power lines knocked down by accumulations of ice.

Rail and highway traffic through the Rocky Mountains was halted, effectively sealing off the province already cut off by air because of a nationwide strike by air traffic controllers.

Major road and rail routes blocked either by snowslides or massive traffic jams included the Rogers Pass and Crowsnest Pass highways through the Rockies, and the Fraser Canyon and Hope-Princeton highways linking Vancouver and the Lower Mainland with the interior.

Both Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways cancelled all eastbound departures from Vancouver and turned back westbound trains at Edmonton and Calgary.

Two westbound CNR passenger trains were stopped at Kamloops in the B.C. interior and their 700 passengers billeted in hotels and private homes in the area.

A westbound CPR passenger train was stranded for a time in the Fraser Canyon but, with a snowplow leading, had reached the tiny canyon community of Yale by Friday night.

All eastbound bus service from Vancouver was cancelled and four westbound Greyhound buses were forced to turn back to Princeton, 180 miles east of here, after being stranded on the route to Hope, 90 miles east of here.

A number of persons who had been stranded north of Hope were rescued Thursday by a snowmobile rescue crew preceded by a three-man party on snowshoes.

In the Fraser Canyon, 18 persons, including children, were rescued Friday from one of a series of tunnels on the mountainous stretch of road

SUN NOT STAYING

If anyone noticed that peculiar phenomenon shining on Victoria today, be assured it is a temporary condition.

The weatherman says the sun isn't going to shine any more, at least this weekend.

He's calling for mostly cloudy conditions with the occasional rain shower thrown in. Hopefully the showers won't be quite as intense as the long periods of rain which practically submerged Victoria the last few days.

Whatever the case, they'll be around tonight and Sunday.

Government Warns Insurance Firms

The provincial government will take a dim view of any attempts to get around its order for a $15 maximum premium for no-fault automobile insurance coverage effective March 1.

Dr. J. F. K. English, chairman of the B.C. Automobile Insurance Board, said Friday a letter to car insurance companies gives "some indication" that the board will consider "action" against such attempts.

The board issued the order Friday for a $15 maximum premium for the no-fault coverage nine days after a hearing at which insurance companies warned they would have to increase third-party liability premiums to offset

Oil Has Been Shipped for Years Down B.C. Coast From Alaska

VANCOUVER (CP) — Environmentalists concerned over the threat of pollution from a yet-to-be-decided American oil tanker route down the British Columbia coast have been given a new target.

It appears that an American marine towing company and at least one Vancouver firm have been moving oil in bulk by barge through coastal waters for years.

Mark Rose, New Democratic Party member of Parliament for Fraser Valley West, said Friday he had written to Environment Minister Jack Davis and Transport Minister Don Jamieson on the matter two months ago.

He said Mr. Jamieson had replied confirming the oil shipments by a Seattle firm, while Mr. Davis denied any such shipments.

Robert Roe, general manager of the Seattle-based United Transportation Co., confirmed in a telephone interview that his company had been moving barges between Alaska and Washington state "for years."

SHIPMENTS GO MONTHLY

He said there usually is about one shipment a month. The latest arrived in Seattle Friday night with a cargo of 70,000 barrels of oil.

He said the barges use the inside passage between Vancouver Island and the mainland and occasionally take the ocean route to the west of the Island.

Mr. Roe also said that Canadian companies make the same type of shipments on the B.C. coast.

A spokesman for Gulf of Georgia Towing Co. in Vancouver confirmed that the firm periodically ships oil in bulk in barges to coastal points. He said the largest shipments carried are about 30,000 barrels.

Mr. Roe charged in an interview that the information he had received from Mr. Davis was "ridiculous" and that "it seems one ministry doesn't know what the other one is doing."

"Here we have the self-styled pollution fighter (Davis) from the West Coast who, when asked something of his own area, takes two months to come up with the wrong answer," he said.

The NDP member also said that Mr. Jamieson "is misleading the country in claiming there is nothing the government can do to prevent or regulate the shipments, especially if Canadian vessels are also involved."

INKY HEATH doubles over following attack by woman on left as Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home calmly looks on.

HURLED INK SMEARS HEATH

BRUSSELS (UPI) — A woman hit British Prime Minister Edward Heath with a bottle of ink today as he arrived to sign the European Common Market membership treaty.

As Heath walked up the marble staircase of the Egmont Palace, the woman threw a bottle of ink which splashed over his clothes and over the stairs. The woman herself was splashed with ink.

Heath left the building immediately to change his clothes, delaying the formal signing.

The woman, who gave her name as Miss Karen Cooper, 31, a psychologist and teacher of German nationality, was led away by Belgian police.

Apparently, she had obtained accreditation as a news correspondent to cover the signing ceremony and used this to gain entrance into the heavily guarded palace.

Before she was led away she handed out copies of a mimeographed statement protesting plans by the British government and the Greater London Council, the British capital's local parliament, to redevelop the area of the Covent Garden vegetable market in London.

Miss Cooper did not appear to be connected with a small group of anti-market protesters who demonstrated outside the palace before the signing ceremony.

Later, Heath returned and signed the treaty.
